Barr steps down as dean of Coastal's Wall College of Business

Peter B. Barr will step down as dean of Coastal's E. Craig Wall Sr. College of Business Administration, effective Dec. 8, to take a new position with Burroughs & Chapin Company, Inc., of Myrtle Beach. A national search for a new dean will begin immediately and an interim dean will be announced soon, according to Coastal President Ronald R. Ingle.

Peter Barr

"Pete Barr has led Coastal's Wall College of Business through a period of significant development and achievement," said Ingle. "His leadership, integrity and dedication to excellence have helped place the Wall College in the top tier of business programs in the country."

Barr has served as dean of the Wall College of Business since July 1, 1992, and has been a member of Coastal's faculty since 1987. During his tenure, the Wall College of Business earned national accreditation and developed many innovative new academic programs.

Barr was a driving force in the process of accreditation. In June 1998, the Wall College of Business was officially accredited by the AACSB-The International Association for Management Education. Only the top 25 percent of the more than 1,200 colleges and universities in the nation offering undergraduate business degrees earn AACSB accreditation.

Academic programs which have been established at Coastal under Barr's leadership include the Resort Tourism Management program, which prepares students for management-level positions in the hospitality industry, and the Professional Golf Management program, which earned national accreditation from the Professional Golfers' Association of America (PGA) in 1998. Barr took a leadership role in establishing a unique international cooperative program with the Autonomous University in Barcelona, Spain, in connection with Coastal's golf and tourism programs. The Wall Fellows program, a rigorous leadership training program for Coastal's top business students, also was developed during his tenure.

While he was a professor of business administration, Barr was instrumental in the establishment of Coastal's Center for Economic and Community Development and became the center's first director in 1989. The center functions as a bridge between the university and the community, providing technical and applied research and consulting for individuals, businesses and governmental entities throughout the region.

Resort Tourism Program names Board of Advisers

A Board of Advisers has been established for the Resort Tourism Management (RTM) program at Coastal. The board, which consists of local, regional, national and international leaders, recently held its first meeting on Coastal's campus. Initially, the board is scheduled to meet twice yearly.

"The board will provide a bridge between the academic environment and the real world," said Peter Barr, dean of Coastal's E. Craig Wall Sr. College of Business Administration, which administers the RTM program. "They will consult with the university on curriculum, recruitment and development matters of the program. These selected industry experts have great knowledge of the tourism industry and will be tremendous assets to our program."

Students in Coastal's RTM program take specialized courses in the areas of marketing research, commercial real estate finance, public and private partnerships, and tourism planning. The students are also required to participate in four paid internship experi-

Fischer, who is Warren Professor of History at Brandeis University, has also taught at Oxford University, Harvard University and at the Universities of Otago and Waikato in New Zealand.

Charles Joyner, Burroughs Distinguished Professor of Southern History at Coastal, calls Fischer "one of the most brilliant scholars of his generation." Joyner also will give a brief talk focusing on local history following Fischer's lecture.

A native of Baltimore, Fischer has received numerous awards for his scholarship and teaching. He is author of 10 books, including such prize-winning works as Albion's Seed, Paul Revere's Ride and The Great Wave: Price Movements in Modern History.

Did You Know?

Coastal's Departments of Athletics and Student Affairs have teamed up to present "Midnight Mania 2000" on Friday, Oct. 13. Prior to unveiling the 2000-2001 men's and women's basketball teams at the stroke of midnight, a mini-carnival, with food and a disc jockey, and a step show will take place outside of Kimbel Arena beginning at 9 p.m. A surfboard will be given away at the end of the night.

Department of Art submits NASAD Accreditation Review

Evaluators from the National Association of Schools of Art and Design (NASAD) will be on campus Oct. 24 to 26 as part of the accreditation review process for Coastal's Department of Art. NASAD is the agency responsible for the accreditation of all art and design curricula.

The Department of Art was encouraged to seek accreditation following a positive review of Coastal's 1996 visual and performing arts programs by the South Carolina Commission on Higher Education (CHE). "The report helped confirm the department's determination that seeking accreditation was both feasible and in line with our goals and commitment to excellence," says Charles Wright, chair of the department.

During the past two years many recommendations for improvement have been met, including updating the art, design, art education and art history holdings in Kimbel Library, increasing the number of volumes to 5,000 and upgrading and enlarging the department's slide collection. An art educator and art historian, each with doctorates in their respective fields, have been hired to augment the studio faculty who offer comprehensive courses in painting, sculpture, printmaking, photography, graphic design and drawing. These initiatives have received support from the administration and have been made possible through the receipt of a $57,604 performance improvement grant initiated by President Ronald R. Ingle and awarded by CHE.

As part of the accreditation process, the art faculty also completed a Self-Study document which assesses the planned growth and development of the art studio and art studio/secondary education programs.

The on-site visit will focus primarily on the activities and studios in the Art Center. Visits will also be made to Kimbel Library, the Humanities and Fine Arts Building construction site and to the sculpture studio housed in the Atlantic Center.

Computer Science students place in international competition

Students from Coastal's Department of Computer Science placed in the Top 30 out of 77 Southeastern college and university teams competing in the annual Association for Computing Machinery (ACM) International Collegiate Programming Contest, sponsored by IBM. The event was held at Georgia College and State University in Milledgeville, Sept. 29 and 30.

Coastal computer science majors who participated in the event were: Barry Donohue, Ryan Karetas, Mike Pilecki, Michael Wisener, John Wu and Marcus Wu.

"We were excited to be a part of such a prestigious programming competition," said Abdallah Haddad, director of Coastal's Academic Center and Coastal's team coach for the event. Haddad also is a part-time instructor of computer science. "Coastal's two teams took the 29th and 30th spots out of 77 teams. Even better, Coastal's teams ranked eighth and ninth within their division (universities without a computer science graduate program). We are proud of our students for this accomplishment, which reflects the growth and progress of Coastal's Department of Computer Science. We look forward to higher rankings in the future."

Other schools which participated in the competition include Auburn University, University of Central Florida, Clemson University, Georgia Tech, Florida State University and the University of South Carolina. Coastal participated in the competition for the first time last year.

Coastal teams with Microsoft to host Internet Town Meeting for senior adults

Area adults interested in finding out how to take advantage of many life-improving services offered through the Internet should plan to attend a free seminar presented by Microsoft Network (MSN) and Coastal Carolina University at Coastal's Wall Auditorium on Saturday, Oct. 28. Two sessions will be offered: a morning session from 10 to 11:45 a.m. and a repeat session from 1 to 2:45 p.m.

The seminar, titled "Bridging the Digital and Generational Divides," is designed to enable active adults to participate in the growing number of opportunities made possible through the Internet and new innovative Internet appliances. Topics of interest to be covered in the seminar include communication, e-mail, and accessing information on health care, travel, personal finance, volunteerism, employment and continuing education opportunities.

"As our society becomes more dependent on the Internet for communication, seniors and active adults are increasingly at risk of being left on the shoulder of the information superhighway," says seminar leader Craig Spiegle, CEO of AgeLight, a national advocate for technology literacy for seniors. "These seminars will offer a non-intimidating, town meeting-style forum for adults to learn about the Internet and how it can enhance their lives."

Other topics the seminar will address include how to manage your investments to accessing governmental services including Social Security and the IRS.

Although the seminars are free, pre-registration is recommended. To register or for more information, call 349-2665.
