Calling All Colors conference a huge success

Coastal's Calling All Colors '94, a race unity conference for students in grades three through eight, was held Saturday, Jan. 22 in the Wall School of Business Building.

Two hundred students from 20 Horry County schools attended the conference. The conference gives young people the opportunity to talk about their feelings and experiences with race and race relations, and to learn about other people's ideas for building cross-cultural bridges. The conference included workshops, drama, cooperative activities, art and more.

Through collaborative brainstorming, participants came up with school action plans at the conference. Some of these plans included harmony clubs, debates, poster contests and interactive parent/student skit clubs.

In an effort to promote a sense of community for conference attendees, conference size was limited to 200 participants; 60 students placed their names on a waiting list.

According to Sally Hare, conference organizers are looking at ways to encourage schools and communities to adopt their own version of Calling All Colors. "Our hope is that participants will take what they learned during the conference back to their own schools and communities."

A follow-up meeting is planned for April at Coastal Carolina University.

The first Calling All Colors conference was held in January 1992. Anisa Kintz, the then 9-year-old Conway student who initiated the conference, was named President Bush's 750th Daily Point of Light in April 1992. Kintz was featured on a two-hour Disney special focusing on Point of Light Award recipients that aired July 4, 1992 on CBS. Kintz and six other children from around the country were featured with the Rev. Jesse Jackson on a Disney Channel special on children combatting racism during December 1992.

Calling All Colors also was named a Program of Excellence by the National Continuing Education Association in 1992 and won a Creative Programming Award from the National University Continuing Education Association in 1993.
