Cooperative Golf Management Program Accredited by PGA

The Professional Golfer's Association (PGA) has accredited Coastal Carolina University's Cooperative Golf Management Program.

Coastal and three other colleges and universities were the first to be selected for inclusion in the PGA's Professional Golf Management (PGM) program since 1991. The other schools to be accredited were Florida State University, Methodist College in Fayetteville, N.C., and Campbell University in Buies Creek, N.C.

PGA officials visited Coastal in September to evaluate its golf program, according to Darcy Carr, professor of economics and director of Coastal's Cooperative Golf Management program.

Although Coastal's Cooperative Golf Management program was modeled on existing PGA programs and has grown steadily since it was initiated in 1994, the official PGA stamp of approval is going to make a positive difference, according to Carr.

"The question of PGA accreditation comes up in almost every conversation I have with students and parents of prospective students interested in our program. A very high percentage of them are aware of PGA accreditation. We are now in a better position to attract students into the program," said Carr.

Carr credits the Myrtle Beach Area Golf Course Owner's Association with the success of Coastal's program and its acceptance by the PGA. "Area courses make the program work by offering internships and playing privileges to participating students," said Carr. "Without the support of local golf courses the program could not have achieved the success it has in such a short amount of time."

Coastal's Cooperative Golf Management Program requires students to earn a bachelor of science degree in business administration/marketing while taking specific golf management courses such as hospitality management, turf management, landscape design, first aid/basic life support and kinesiology, the study of the anatomy of human movement.

Other colleges and universities which are approved by the PGA include Ferris State University in Big Rapids, Mich., Mississippi State University, New Mexico State University and Penn State University.

For more information, contact Carr at extension 2654.

Commencement set for December 13

Coastal will recognize more than 300 students during commencement Sunday, Dec. 13 at 1 p.m. in the All American Music Theater at Fantasy Harbour in Myrtle Beach.

Two hundred twelve December 1998 undergraduate candidates will be recognized, as well as 120 August 1998 graduates. The public is welcome to attend.

Richard Oliver Collin, professor of political science and Kearns Palmetto Professor of Humanities, will deliver the commencement address.

Collin earned a bachelor's degree in classical languages and history from Canisium College in Buffalo, N.Y., in 1962, a master's degree in political science from Kansas University in 1973, and a D.Phil. in politics from Oxford University in 1983.

After earning his bachelor's degree, Collin began graduate school at Harvard but his studies were interrupted when he was called to active duty by the U.S. Army. He spent two years at the Pentagon as a briefing officer, serving under the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff of Intelligence. As a civilian official for the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA), Collin was stationed in Rome for five years.

In the early 1970s, Collin spent a number of years in the Middle East, where he witnessed civil wars in Lebanon and Oman as well as the events leading to the fall of the Shah and the capture of the American Hostages in Iran. After resigning from the government, Collin served with the University of Maryland's European division, teaching in Italy, Spain, Morocco, Greece, Great Britain and Germany.

The author of three novels as well as other books and articles on international affairs, Collin has been particularly interested in studying the roots of political violence. His novels include: Imbroglia (1981), Contessa (1994) and The Man With Many Names (1995). He also has published numerous articles in scholarly journals such as the American Historical Review and the Journal of Politics.

Collin joined the Coastal faculty in 1984 and won the Distinguished Professor of the Year Award in 1988. At the 1998 Honors Convocation, Collin was presented the Distinguished Teaching Award, which recognizes individuals who demonstrate excellence in teaching.

Giving Honduras a Hand

Coastal faculty and students organized a successful drive to aid victims of Hurricane Mitch in Honduras.

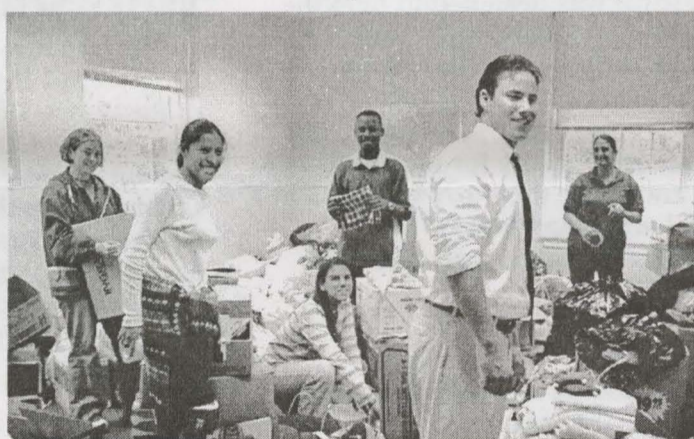

"My husband and I spent our honeymoon in Honduras," said JoAnne Flanders, instructor of Spanish at Coastal, "and it breaks our hearts to see the suffering that is going on there now." She discussed the situation with the students in her Spanish 101 and 111 classes, which turned into a brainstorming session on how to aid the victims of the disaster. Spanish instructor Kristi Steinbrecher and her students joined the effort, and Suzanne Thompson of the Foreign Language Lab and Sara Sobota of the Writing Center were also involved.

They organized drop stations for donations of needed supplies on campus at the Student Center and the Foreign Language Lab, and some students arranged for donations to be taken up in their workplaces and churches. Amy McClellan, a junior management major from Murrells Inlet, arranged a community donations drive at three Myrtle Beach area fire stations. International Paper Co. supplied a truck and a driver to haul the goods that were collected.

Flanders' husband Jack, network manager at North Myrtle Beach High School, contacted the Honduran Consulate in Florida, which agreed to arrange for transportation of the donations collected in the Grand Strand area.

"The response from the community has been incredible," said Flanders. "People have helped in so many ways. One student whose father is a surgeon brought in some medical supplies, which are extremely useful in Honduras now. The Spanish Department at North Myrtle Beach High School had a contest to see who could bring in the heaviest load of food items. We had to find additional space to store all the goods that came in. We received everything from clothes to food to mattresses."

The campus drive was scheduled to conclude on Nov. 20, the day the students left for fall break. However, Socastee citizen Pitter Caswel has offered to continue the drive and coordinate it from her home. Anyone who would like to donate items may contact her at 650-2649.

"Canned food, medicine and drinking water are priorities," said Flanders. Clothing, particularly disposable diapers, and shelter equipment such as flashlights, can openers, blankets, soap, charcoal and cooking utensils also are needed. Medical donations that are most needed include anti-diarrhea medicines, cotton balls, disinfectants, alcohol, hydrogen peroxide, bandages and antibacterial ointments.

For more information, contact Flanders at extension 2928 or 399-5262.

Do You Know?

The Lady Chanticleers volleyball team won the Big South Conference Championship Nov. 21 when they upset No. 2-ranked Radford University and No. 1-ranked Liberty. This is the Lady Chants' second Big South Championship title in the past three years. They will go on to the NCAA Tournament in early December.

Student Magazine Wins National Awards

The 1997 edition of Archarios, Coastal Carolina University's student literary/art magazine, recently captured two prizes in the Best of Collegiate Design Contest sponsored by the Journal of College Media Advisers.

Archarios won first place in the literary arts spreads category and fifth place in the covers category.

The 1997 edition of the magazine was designed by Lee Jones, a 1997 art studio graduate, and edited by James Guignard, a 1997 English graduate. The faculty adviser of Archarios is Paul A. Olsen, associate professor of art at Coastal. Jones now is art director for Wolverine Brass, Inc., near Conway. Guignard is a graduate student at Western Carolina University.

Sixty-six colleges and universities participated in the competition, including Emory University in Atlanta, Rice University in Houston and Vanderbilt University in Nashville.

For more information, contact Olsen at extension 2704.

Senior Festival set for December 1

Coastal Carolina University seniors in the elementary education, early childhood and secondary education programs will present projects and displays from their methods courses during the Teacher Education Festival on Monday, Dec. 1 from 9 a.m. to noon in the small gym in the Williams Brice Building. The event is free and open to the public.

The festival, set up in a trade show format, is designed to assist senior education majors in assimilating information from their methods courses before they begin practice teaching. The event also gives underclassmen an opportunity to better understand what will be expected of them in their senior year.

"The festival was designed to help the students develop collaboration and presentation skills," said Jessie Brown, associate professor of education and a coordinator of the event. "The event also provides an opportunity for the students to celebrate and share their achievements in a meaningful and tangible way."

For more information, call Brown at extension 2619.

Celebrate the Season

"Celebrate the Season," an afternoon of holiday songs and stories performed by faculty, staff, students and friends of the university, will be held Thursday, Dec. 3 at 3 p.m. in Wheelwright Auditorium. The program is free and open to faculty, staff and their families, and to students. Following "Celebrate the Season," the annual tree lighting ceremony will be held between the Singleton Building and the Student Center. A reception will immediately follow the festivities.

Children attending will receive a special treat and Santa will be available for photographs.

For more information, contact Lamonica Yates at extension 2099 or Carrie Herrington at extension 2569.

Foreign Music CDs Available in the FLIC

Tired of listening to the Top 40? The Foreign Language Instructional Center has music CDs in French, German, Spanish and Latin. Faculty and staff may sign out items for one week. The collection includes Elvis Presley songs in Latin, the latest Mexican rock groups, German opera, and Edith Piaf.

For more information, contact Suzanne Thompson at extension 2478 or check available listings on the Internet at: <http://www.coastal.edu/humanities/flang/flic.htm>.

Babes in Arms auditions, Dec. 5

Auditions for Babes in Arms, a musical comedy, will be held Saturday, Dec. 5 at 10 a.m. in Wheelwright Auditorium. The audition has three parts: voice, monologue, and dance. While not all roles require singing, all auditionees will participate in voice, monologue, and dance auditions. Dress appropriately for the voice and monologue auditions. You will have time to change for the dance audition.

For more information, contact David Bankston at extension 2562.

2nd Annual Santa's Workshop

The 2nd Annual Santa's Workshop/Gingerbread House, sponsored by the Office of Residence Life, will be held Thursday, Dec. 3 from 4 to 6 p.m. located in front of Building C near the sand volleyball court. Children from the community as well as children of Coastal faculty, staff, and student are invited to meet Santa in his workshop and receive a special gift. Refreshments will be served. For more information, contact Gregg Dodd at 347-2406.

Coastal Carolina jazz Ensemble Performs Holiday Concert

All 'Dat Jazz, Coastal's vocal jazz ensemble, will perform a holiday concert Thursday, Dec. 3 at 7 p.m. in Wall Auditorium. The event is free and open to the public.

Led by Dan Ramsey, instructor of music at Coastal, All 'Dat Jazz features seven student vocalists and four professional instrumentalists. The concert will feature seasonal carols and traditional jazz tunes.

For more information, contact Ramsey at extension 2511.
