Learn to communicate better with students

The Center for Effective Teaching and Learning is presenting two seminars this month to help you improve your courses for Fall:

Writing Student Learning Outcomes for Your Syllabus

Wednesday April 12, 3 p.m., University Hall 228

In this seminar we will be working on how to write effective learning outcomes, how to align them with your department's goals and objectives, and how to use them over the course of the semester.

Communicating with the Net Generation

Wednesday April 19, 3 p.m., University Hall 228

How do your students communicate? Effective communication with your students can take many forms. Often the most effective methods are those the students are most comfortable using. In this seminar the following communication tools will be explored:

- Instant Messenger
- Chatrooms
- Blogs
- Facebook
- MySpace

and maybe more. We'll be looking at the possible uses of these media to communicate with students, and discuss the possible pitfalls of each.

Mentors to be celebrated

Eighty-six student mentors will be recognized at an April 24 Mentor Appreciation Celebration Reception at 4:30 p.m. in the Rotunda at University Hall. The students have all mentored for more than a year. Four of the students have mentored for two years, and one has mentored for a year and a half.
