Tea & Ethics discussion is this week

Coastal professor Robert Bass and philosophy department chair Nils Rauhut will lead a discussion entitled "Is 'Doin' What Comes Naturally' Ethical?" on Thursday, Sept. 14 at 4:30 p.m. in room 137 of the Thomas W. and Robin W. Edwards College of Humanities and Fine Arts. Complimentary tea will be served, and all are invited. It's free and open to the public. The program repeats Thursday, Sept. 28 at 6 p.m. at the First Presbyterian Church Fellowship Hall in Myrtle Beach.

Students still needed for council

The following students have volunteered to serve on the Student Advisory Council: Krystin Mementowski, a senior in theater; Amelia Hammond, freshman in theater and English; Neal Causey, senior in English; Stephanie Blaher, senior in history; Paul Puccinelli, sophomore in history; Seraphim Mario J. Beck, junior in political science; Daniel Colaizzi, junior in political science; Angela Dembiczak, senior in history; and Andrew Zwick, senior in political science.

The Departments of Foreign Languages, Music and Art are presently without representation; ideally, two students from each major should serve on the council. The Student Advisory Council meets the last Monday of each month from 4:30 to 6 p.m. The council plays a key role in representing the interests and voice of all humanities students. Refer all interested students to John Navin, EHFA 265 or call 349-2437.

Film open to CCU campus

"The Battle of Algiers," the celebrated 1966 documentary about the Algerian independence movement, will be shown on Tuesday, Sept 26. from 6:30 to 10 p.m. in EHFA 256. All are invited. In addition to the movie, there is an introduction by Richard Clarke about the movie's relevance to today's terrorism. Bonnie Senser will also be showing some of her photos of what the Casbah is like now.
