Amy Tully, music instructor at Coastal and a doctoral music student at the University of South Carolina, has won the National Flute Association's 31st annual competition for newly published music. She will perform a recital of new flute music before 6,000 professional flutists at the association's convention Aug. 9 to 12 in Albuquerque, N.M. A resident of Myrtle Beach, Tully has taught at Coastal since 2002. She earned her bachelor's degree in flute performance from the University of North Carolina at Wilmington and her master's in musicology from Northwestern University. In August, she will earn a doctoral music degree in flute performance from USC. She is principal flutist with the Long Bay Symphony and frequently performs with the Strand Strings and Tidelands Trio throughout South Carolina. Most recently, Tully performed with the University of South Carolina's touring Chamber Orchestra as principal flutist in Italy, Bulgaria and the Czech Republic.
