Underage drinking conference coming up

Coastal will host a three-day conference on underage drinking on Aug. 15 to 17 in the Wall Auditorium and various classrooms. The conference will address current trends in underage drinking and the strategies and practices needed for prevention, enforcement and community engagement in the problem of underage alcohol abuse. A panel discussion with law enforcement, representatives of the alcohol industry, media, prevention counselors, students and others will include discussions of sexual assault, drinking trends and how alcohol effects young people.

Call for faculty bios

The Office of Marketing Communications is updating faculty bio and expertise files. Please send a short paragraph including:

- Your current title at Coastal
- Your education: include degrees, and where and when you earned them
- Your accomplishments
- Your service to CCU: Indicate the year you joined the Coastal faculty, plus any noteworthy university or community achievements or contributions.

In a separate paragraph, list your area(s) of expertise. We are frequently contacted by media and other organizations in search of experts on various subjects. Your participation will help us connect them with the best sources, while also increasing positive exposure for the faculty and the university. E-mail your bios/expertise information to Ashley Taliana at amtalian@coastal.edu.

CCU community gets fit

CCU students, staff and faculty are invited to participate in daily fitness classes at the recreation center.
