A dangerous demographic

by Becky Powell

A new problem has emerged facing Coastal Carolina students in relation to the outside community that borders the University on all sides. According to CCU President Ron Ingle, a number of complaining phone calls have come into his office relating to students driving too fast in some sports neighborhoods off campus.

"Those areas of course, are completely out of my jurisdiction and the University’s jurisdiction. However, I’m still concerned for the safety of the students and of the community, so I’d like to see everyone pay more attention to what they’re doing out there," said Ingle.

Considering the University’s lack of control over such an "outside" issue, Ingle thought perhaps a simple appeal to the student drivers of CCU might be in order.

According to Ingle, most of the calls he has received have been from residents of the Carolina Forest vicinity.

The bustling area is one of the fastest growing "mini-cities" in Horry County. So many college students live in and around the area that it has almost become a "college town" in itself in relation to CCU. With students living in the homes and apartments at such places as Canterbury, Avalon, Walker’s Woods, Southgate and other popular developments, it’s no surprise that many locals categorize "the college kids" as the main source of problematic speeding.

According to Ingle, one of the fastest growing "mini-cities" in Horry County is Carolina Forest, which has become a popular area for police to nab drivers through Quail Creek over the light at University Place. Although this is a somewhat rare occurrence, students have reported seeing a motorcycle patrol sitting near the golf course clubhouse, presumably waiting for someone to pass by too fast.

With all those local speed traps held as a reminder, CCU students ought to take heed and watch their speed.

"We want to maintain a good relationship with the community here, because we are still a growing University. We’re depending, in part, on this country and its people to help us become what we want to be as an institution," said Ingle.

No used Books to buy: New majors at Coastal

by Ashley Taliana

The addition of new majors sounds great on a university's resume, but what is it really like for the students pursuing these degrees?

Economics is one of three new degree programs Coastal has added to its list of majors. The economics students that were recently interviewed liked that this major is a more specific area of study to then study the other business majors offered. Another positive is smaller class sizes and lots of one-on-one interaction between students and professors.

Matthew Miller said, "It’s a closer-knit group of students; we spend a lot of time together. We’ve all become friends. It’s good because we have study groups and help one another throughout all of our classes. This is one of the big bonuses of being part of a new major."

Along with the perks of a new major come the hardships. Erica Dawgert (pictured at right), the first of 10 currently enrolled economics students to graduate from Coastal with this degree, found some difficulty in her first year. Some of her classes got dropped because of the lack of students taking them and she was limited in her schedule choice. Dawgert, set to graduate in December, is ecstatic to be part of history.

After graduation, she would like to go into banking or financial planning and later earn her master’s degree in economics. Her ultimate goal is to work in policy-making for the government.

Throughout all of the interviews two names came up many times as influential professors: Dr. Yoav Wachsman and Dr. Dennis Edwards. Even though this is uncharted territory for them as well, the students felt the professors’ encouragement and accessibility have been key factors in making this experience a happy, successful one.

Applied physics, another new major, offers students a physics major with an emphasis on environmental applications. This new physics major can be applied to the Coastal/Clemson Engineering Dual Degree Program. This program allows students to earn their education at CCU while preparing for an engineering degree from Clemson. The "3+2" program includes three years at Coastal majoring in biology, chemistry, computer science, mathematics or applied physics then two years and one summer at Clemson to attain an engineering degree.

Resort tourism management, the third new major, used to be a business management emphasis but it became its own major in May of 2005. According to Heather Himmelrick the only problem she encountered with starting a new major was "There’s no used books to buy!"

Campus Edge: A new way of living soon to be available for CCU students

by Rachel Addis
Staff Writer

By Fall 2006, Campus Edge, the new and upcoming cool way of living for Coastal Carolina students, will be finished. Located directly next to University Place and just off of S.C. Hwy. 544, this apartment complex will be what everyone is talking about. This complex is being constructed with catering to the college students in mind. Everything students want and more will be included.

Campus Edge will be owned and managed by The Bradley Company, which has been in the housing industry for students for over 20 years. The complex will be privately owned and not affiliated with Coastal Carolina University. All utilities are covered by the rent check and there is no extra charge for the use of any of the amenities. The apartment complex will be open all hours, all days of the year. Students will not have to leave for holidays or any other mandatory closings that are associated with happen on-campus housing.

The apartment complex will consist of two phases. Phase one will have 192 units with 672 bedrooms. There are 36 two-bedroom apartments, 24 three-bedroom apartments and 132 four-bedroom apartments. Phase two will have 420 bedrooms and will only consist of three-bedroom and four-bedroom apartments.

The entire project will have about 1100 bedrooms total. Every bedroom includes a private full bathroom and walk in closet. Bedrooms are approximately 11' by 12' or 132 sq. ft. Also, there are fully equipped kitchens and laundry rooms in every single apartment.

Other amenities include: broadband Internet access, cable television with HBO, a full-size washer and dryer, a screened porch, a full-sized refrigerator, a range/oven, a built in microwave and a garbage disposal. The only thing Campus Edge does offer is a local telephone number in each apartment room. There is one parking spot guaranteed for each bedroom. Pets however will not be allowed to live in the apartments. Residents will not be allowed to have pets.

Campus Edge will also have many community amenities to offer. This plans include a private swimming pool, hot tub, fitness center, upright tanning booths, computer lab/study lounge, game room, putting green, beach volleyball courts and basketball courts. There will be two stand-up tanning booths. The company found that in the past, having tanning within the apartment complex is a huge success. The reason being that many people pay for tanning monthly and by having it included in what you pay already for rent, it will save students money. The fitness center will include three ellipticals, two treadmills and a bike. Every piece of equipment will have a LCD television attached.

There are two different kinds of leases students can sign, a joint lease and an individual lease. With a joint lease, each roommate is held responsible for the entire rent. If a roommate fails to pay or leaves, the other roommate(s) are expected to pay the entire rent due. An individual lease has a separate agreement for each roommate. If a roommate leaves or fails to pay, other roommate(s) do not have to pay or be responsible for any portion of the particular roommate’s rent.

The amenity building will be open in March with a sample unit attached to it so that students will be able to walk through and see the layout of each room. The company was scheduled to break ground on Monday, Oct. 3 and plans on having the first phase finished for people to live in for the 2006 summer. They are collecting applications online at www.campusedge.net and basketball courts. There is a huge response to the complex so far. Look for them at the last three football games they will be promoting for Campus Edge.

CCU's Kimbel Library book sale to aid hurricane-ravaged libraries

Public Service Announcement: Coastal Carolina University’s Kimbel Library is hosting a book sale Oct. 12 and 13 to aid Gulf Coast area libraries damaged by the recent hurricanes. The sale will begin at 9 a.m. and end at 4 p.m. each day. Other South Carolina libraries, such as Clemson University, have also begun to have relief projects to assist the many damaged libraries.

Proceeds from the sale will go to the American Library Association’s (ALA) hurricane relief fund. Donations for the book sale, such as books, CDs, videos and DVDs, are being accepted through Friday, Oct. 7. The monies will be used to rebuild damaged libraries and replace books and other materials. Donations may be dropped off during Kimbel Library’s regular hours: Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to midnight; Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; and Sunday, 1 to 11 p.m.

According to the ALA, more than a dozen university and public libraries along the gulf suffered serious damage. The Mose Hudson Tapia Public Library in Bayou La Batre, Ala., was completely destroyed, and 90 percent of the document collection at Tulane University was lost to flooding. For more information on the book sale, contact Sallie Clarkson at 349-2448 or sallie@coastal.edu or Margaret Fain at 349-2410 or margaret@coastal.edu. More information on ALA’s hurricane fund can be found at www.ala.org.

The truth behind the orange mask

by Becky Powell

So here's the truth—in its brief and unadorned glory—about Mr. Barry Debsky, also known as "Goggle Guy."

Barry is 49 years old and lives in Conway. He attended Carnegie Mellon University, where he studied music. He spends quite a bit of time at Coastal because he is a close friend of several professors in the Humanities buildings, specifically in the music department. He rides his bike because it's a hobby of his and he likes staying active. And of course, there's also the issue of gas prices—Debsky doesn't have to worry much with the effects of a recent rash of natural disasters and oil shortages. The bike is free transportation, and he said he loves that. And as for those humongous orange goggles that he wears, Debsky said they protect his face from rocks and debris that fly off the major highways he rides alongside most days. And, yes, they do help deflect the inevitable splattering of bug guts that would make his otherwise pleasant ride a little difficult.

Debsky attends St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Conway, where he is a very active member. He loves working with kids at the church—in fact, during his spare time he does professional illustration for children's books. He is especially proud—given his musical background—of the recent addition of a several million-dollar pipe organ that was added to the church. It's a truly impressive sight, "well worth the Sunday drive," Debsky agreed.

The best way to sum up Debsky's personality, however, is in his short, awkward speech.

"Wayne Gretzky is my brother," he said, without even cracking the slightest hint of a smile.

"Oh... really? Wow," I replied with a healthy amount of disbelief.

"No, not really, but this lady used to say that about me all the time. 'cause 'Debsky' and 'Gretzky' sort of rhyme, and it was really funny," he said, once again without a smile or laugh.

"Okay... well, anyway, there's the answer that many a befuddled CCU motortist has asked at one time or another. That guy with the bright orange gog­gles? It's just Wayne Gretzky's broth­er... well, not really.

A rant of universal proportions: “Damn the man! Save the empire!”

by Becky Powell
Perhaps we have too much time on our hands these days. College students party harder than they study. College police force ticket people for parking more than they do for actual crimes (sounds familiar). Even the government has too much time on its hands—maybe in the great State of Cheese? Yes, it looks as if some colleges in our progressive world have decided to go the way of the Stone Age and get all caveman on us. Case in point: a recent University of Wisconsin on-campus birth control ban. According to an editorial in the Sept. 13 issue of The Michigan Dailyl: when students returned to their campus this fall, their usual, rightful on-campus access to birth control had been shot down by a state-approved bill that passed in June: The reasoning behind this hairbrained idea? According to Wisconsin’s super-conservative representative Dan Lemashue, “dispensing birth control and emergency contraceptives leads to promiscuity.” What a freakin’ revelation! Promiscuous college students. Could they possibly be for real?

Unfortunately, I think he is. A lot of people fall under the wrong impression that emergency contraception is the same as an abortion—and you know that thing about stupidity and the flu, right? They’re both contagious. I had to explain this class the other day to someone in my class to explain that they were not the same thing. The arguments made against these kinds of medications are simply not founded in any sort of accurate reasoning, as far as I can tell. It’s just another thing about the way people will try to control the women in their lives. Every time there is a new development in birth control, there is always some sort of argument about it, but the one thing that I have come to learn is that the women of the world will always find a way to control their bodies, no matter what laws are put into place.

Chris also discussed one potential upcoming project for students on campus. Some of his short-term goals include setting up recycle bins at major sporting events and football games. As far as long-term goals, S.T.A.R. hopes to eventually develop a compost on campus to minimize unnecessary waste as well as promoting the recycling efforts to include bottles, cans and plastic. So far the project is well on its way with far the project is well on its way with support from Coastal Carolina University, but it’s not really the students I am so worried about. It’s those poor CCU “public safety” officers. I think we all ought to be worried, actually. Anyone who has been around campus knows that the golf cart cavalry is constantly on patrol. That’s right, those helpful little guys and gals are constantly on the look out for students’ best interests—or at least, for the parking grid’s best interest. My poor mother parked outside the Student Center for approximately three minutes the other day to run something up to my office on her way to the beach. No sooner had she left the office and returned to her car (parked in an unmarked spot, generally used for students, during the afternoon hours), then she had a parking ticket. In fact, the nice man who scrawled the little yellow message for her was busy at the next car overdoing his thing. Not being too different from myself in matters of confrontation, Mom walked over and said something to the man. Rather than acknowledge her or even hear her out, he just said “Read the back of the ticket, lady.” Here’s the crazy part about our campus police set-up. I've seen them consistently poke along in situations involving true urgency. This past summer, as I worked in the pool at campus recreation, my co-workers and I had to call police to come remove a rowdy, hostile, threatening and completely stone group of high school guys from our facility. We had to listen to screaming, taunting and threats from those four misfits for almost 20 minutes before Campus Police ambled their doughnut-loving butts over to help us. But campus is empty at 5 p.m. in the summertime. Where were the cops? Was there a massive parking emergency somewhere on the other side of campus?

I think my point is probably pretty clear: there’s a distinct smell wafting across college campuses all over the country these days, a scent that has filled my nostrils (and hopefully, yours) to the point of suffocation. The noxious fumes, which permeate our every action, are a testament to progress in modern society, must be stopped. Students of CCU, I call you to clear the air. The smell of bull crap must go.

S.T.A.R sets example for student service

by Amanda Fanean
The students of S.T.A.R. have really taken action to shed light on some of the important issues on and off the CCU campus. Raising almost $7,000 at the Hurricane Katrina Benefit Concert, S.T.A.R. members are making a difference one tie-dye shirt at a time. S.T.A.R. members have been working side by side recently at a local warehouse sorting, organizing and shipping out supplies to victims in New Orleans. Co-coordinates, Chris Carhart and Sunni Stewart were exceptionally happy with this year’s turnout, remarking that it has been the largest group S.T.A.R. has seen since the club was established over six years ago.

Eager to put such enthusiasm to use, Chris and Sunni have been planning a variety of different projects hoping to get Coastal students to see the “big picture.” Chris also discussed one potential upcoming project for students on campus. A strong supporter of recycling at home, Chris hopes to increase student body awareness and get people to utilize campus resources. In a recently released fact sheet, CCU recycling is way below the bar, pinpointing specific problem areas and unused paper recycle bins located within each major building on campus. Some of his short-term goals include setting up recycle bins at major sporting events and football games. As far as long-term goals, S.T.A.R. hopes to eventually develop a compost on campus to minimize unnecessary waste as well as promoting the recycling efforts to include bottles, cans and plastic. So far the project is well on its way with support from Coastal Carolina University, but it’s not really the students I am so worried about. It’s those poor CCU “public safety” officers. Are we paying attention?

The Showdown: a battle of opinions

Beer

by Kyle B. Ward

There are many facets of why beer is so much better than liquor. There's only one way liquor is made and that's the hard way. There aren't really any flavors of liquor either. Liquor does more bodily harm anyway. No sane person drives drunk off of liquor; if they do, it's "sayonara buckaroo."

Liquor is a lot like the strip club; it's expensive, it can really alter your behavior after a long, and it can ruin marriages. Beer is easier to get homemade, whereas liquor is more of a challenge to make. Not only that, beer is easier to acquire. You can find it at almost any convenience store, as opposed to liquor, which isn't always a commodity for retailers. Honestly, who holds a keg party that has liquor?

There are many flavors and tastes for beer. There are raspberry, lime, unfiltered, strawberry and yes, low-carb beer. There are many domesticated brands of beer as well. The effervescent arrays of foreign brews help make beer more of a universal drink that every adult over 21 enjoys.

Beer goes great with almost any good meal in the afternoon. No liquor drink is any good in the morning, but a nice brewhski with a lobster dinner would do the trick. Having liquor with it would mean that you'd need two magazines when you go to the bathroom in the morning. Beer is a gradual drink; you can drink it over time and still be alert. You can't do that with liquor; it'll get you and it'll get you quick.

Beer is a "man's man" beverage. It's a drink for the average Joe and Janets that really help ugly people have relations with people that they're unlikely to relate with when sober. I wouldn't recommend that you drink liquor with beer; it won't be a pretty sight to see when you're calling dinosaurs at an untimely moment.

The fact of the matter is, liquor is a dangerous alcoholic beverage. Whatever good breath you have before consuming liquor will be long gone. The time getting drunk off of liquor is considerably faster than beer. You don't need ice when you're drinking beer, so less maintenance is a key component of why beer is far better than liquor. One of the best beer related foods I've ever had was beer bread. I had it when I was seven, and it was pretty tasty. I can't fathom a liquor-flavored bread. Maybe it'll be tasty, but I doubt it.

Liquor

by Becky Powell

You know the old saying: candy is dandy, but liquor is quicker. And classier. And tastier. And more versatile. And higher quality. And, well, a bevy of other forms of "better." But for now, let me just break it down for you lager-lapping types: beer, while having its various virtues and uses, is usually most popular at keg parties. Here's where I come in—I'm the girl who shows up at the keg party with her own personal supply of "the good stuff," simply because she can't stand the taste of beer. I'm the girl who tailgates with her own trunk stashed with a cooler, some sodas and juices to mix different goodies up, some ice, and (of course) a bunch of bottles of "the good stuff." Why else would people call it "the good stuff" if it wasn't the better choice?

Sure, beer can be fun for a little while, and it has its own specialized uses. But it can always be replaced with a good, stiff, high-quality bourbon and cola. A fleisch attempt at "malts" beverage" can always be one-upped (and then some) by a well-mixed melon liquor-and-sour mixture. And regardless of what men say, a girl can play a mean game of beer pong with a fully-fashined cocktail in her well-manicured hand. I mean, heck, leave beer in your fridge for longer than a week or two and it'll go "skunky." Do the same thing—just let it sit—and liquor will just get better and better.

And as far as its versatility, liquor is top-notch. Think about how many millions of dollars in extra profits a certain company in Tennessee has pulled in making barbecue sauces and marinades flavored with its signature bourbon. Liquor isn't just for glasses—it's useful in seasoning stuff for the grill, it's perfect for mixing into a gourmet coffee treat, and it's always decadent as a dessert topping.

And as for sheer creativity, liquor takes the cake. Where else can someone ingest a concoction with a name as wonderful as "Buttery Nipple," "Sex on the Beach," or "Orgasm?" Even if you don't get to have any of those things, you can still go to the bar, chuck down your bucks, and pretend to be on top of the world. Nobody ever named a pinster after a naughty bedroom activity, did they? I rest my case.
When Hurricane Katrina hit, Coastal Carolina University students took action. Campuswide relief efforts took the form of a bucket brigade coordinated by a cross section of caring students and their faculty and staff. In the final tally, what was important wasn't so much the precious dollars raised for the Coastal Carolina Chapter of the American Red Cross - although nearly $7,000 is impressive - but the strong compassion and concern shown by Coastal students who have once again proved that many hands make big differences.

Thanks to all of the following groups and departments, who, together with many individuals, contributed to the success of the Coastal Carolina Cares campaign for those whose lives have been impacted by Hurricane Katrina.

Dinner and a Movie: “The Greatest Game Ever Played” and Hooters

by Randy Egstrom
Staff Writer, Chanticleer

Hello land, and welcome back to the latest Dinner and a Movie, your source for the greatest reviews of newly released movies and dinner hot spots around Myrtle Beach. As we enter Myrtle Beach’s “golf season,” I found it quite appropriate to renew this article with the perfectly-timed release of “The Greatest Game Ever Played” and indulge you with golf, golf and a little more golf.

The movie is a project for the actor-turned-director Bill Paxton. He desperately wanted to immortalize the story of a young golfer who dared to challenge a better known, established golfer at the 1913 U.S. Open. As you watch the movie you will see that there is much more to the story besides one round of golf. There is commonality between the two. There is a great connection in the story line. This movie is for so many others besides just the golf enthusiasts. This is for the young, the old, for men and women.

“The Greatest Game Ever Played” will keep you plastered to the screen. There aren’t any blood baths, n is there anything of “shock-value,” but the visuals and story do the job. The camera work done was impeccable; if only they could cover some PGA events like that. Sure, “The Greatest Game Ever Played” may not live up to the title, due to some slower scenes and over-acting but it would be a great pick for a light-hearted afternoon with someone who has similar interests to your own.

This week’s dinner was a tough one to get a grasp on. I had a couple ideas shot out right from beneath me. My first idea would have been ideal. My first thought was to test what Caddyshack could have, but to my dismay it hasn’t been replaced by Senior Fogs. Side note: since when has Myrtle Beach become Cancun, Mexico?

With all my ideas turning to garbage, I had a little downtime, and that’s when it hit me: Hooters! Golfers love Hooters, right? I hate to be sexist, but when I think of golfers, women are the last people I picture playing, so excuse me for selecting Hooters for those of you who are only looking for food and not that young girl who flirts with you just enough to earn an extra dollar.

Hooters has an excellent, golfer friendly environment. The restaurant has ice-cold beer, freshly cooked food, and a friendly wait staff. Before you make your trip to Hooters you do want to be sure you’ve got enough in the bank account, because although it’s cheaper than other Myrtle Beach eateries, it sure isn’t a Mickey D’s either. The cheapest item you’ll find is the hot dog for five bucks. I wouldn’t even pay that at a football game. And those famous wings they love to promote are not all they are cracked up to be as well.

Don’t let these few negatives I have brought to your attention deter you from going: it is a place to go and have fun. No you are not going to get “lucky” by going there, but the Hooters wait staff know how to keep you and your group enjoying your time.

To wrap this tremendous, hot-off-the-presses article up, “The Greatest Game Ever Played” falls one stroke behind and gets a bogey. While my dinner pick may have been a miss with the food, sometimes it’s about the atmosphere. So to those out there in Chanticleer land, heed this advice: study hard, but watch movies harder.
With just a few weeks to go, it's time to start putting some thought into this year's Halloween costume. Are you too old for Halloween? With many area clubs and other venues, there are plenty of opportunities to join in the fun. Chanticleer has a few suggestions to get you started. This year we aimed for low budget costumes.

Favorite Movie Character

Here our model donned a tutu and some mismatched clothes to charade as Ace Venture. All that had to be purchased for this particular costume was the tutu. Pull your favorite videos and DVDs from your archives and start searching for your ideal character. Use items you own or visit a thrift store (or a friend) for additional supplies.

Superhero

Did you have a favorite superhero you spent many a Saturday morning with when you were growing up? It's time to visit the little boys' Underoos section at Walmart and pull together a costume. Don't forget the colored tights, and of course no superhero is complete without a cape around the neck. Try an old blanket or a pillow-

Roman or Greek God or Goddess

Here's a low budget costume at its finest. If you have a bed; then you have a costume. The most you'll need to buy are some safety pins and a bottle of spray paint. Space Cadet

Earth to college students... this may be one of the cheapest and flashiest costumes yet. All you need to do is wrap yourself in tin foil and you’re set. Make a more revealing version of the alien garb, as shown here, or do a full body version over a pair of leggings and a tank top. A little clear packing tape will help hold the foil in place. For a more out-of-this-world look, add some face paint and glue some wiggly eyes or colored craft balls to your foil-wrapped body. Don’t try to sneak up on anybody though, because by Caroline Smith  Everyone has heard the catchy song of the month—Fall Out Boy's "Sugar, We're Going Down" from the band's third album (but you didn't know they had three albums). If you haven't heard it and have no idea what I'm talking about, just stop reading this article. If you are one of those thousands of people who just absolutely can't get enough of that song and blame your stereo every time it comes on the radio, read on.

On Tuesday, Sept. 27, a new band's first CD was released that you might be interested in, if you like Fall Out Boy. Panic! At The Disco is a four-man band from Las Vegas that was discovered by none other than Fall Out Boy's own Pete Wentz. Panic! At The Disco was signed by the same label, (Decaydance/Fueled By Ramen) and soon after wrote, recorded and released "A Fever You Can't Sweat Out."

You can listen to the latter and four other songs on their purevolume.com website, including the beat-evolving tune "Camisado," and "I Write Sins and Not Tragedies," a song that starts off sounding almost circus-like, then picks up into a song that you can really rock out to that has almost an angry feel to it. They must be doing something right—the band's next four scheduled shows are already sold out. They visit the House of Blues in mid-October with Fall Out Boy, Motion City Soundtrack and The Starting Line. but adl enough, that show is sold out as well. Don't you want students to know that it is open to all majors and that even though they may not like their chemistry or science classes, this club is not the same. We want to make it really fun and relate it to topics that are relevant to real life.

Although the lead singers of the two bands may sound similar, Panic! At The Disco's sound is noticeably original. The band's CD is an interesting blend of innovative and evocative melodies, made with drum machines, accordions, Vaudeville piano, and synthesizers. The lyrics grab your attention and make you want to listen, and the song titles are ridiculously long, like "London Beckoned Song Written About Money Written By Machines," and "The Only Difference Between Martyrdom and Suicide Is Press Coverage" (say that five times fast). You can listen to the latter and four other songs on their purevolume.com website, including the beat-evolving tune "Camisado," and "I Write Sins and Not Tragedies," a song that starts off sounding almost circus-like, then picks up into a song that you can really rock out to that has almost an angry feel to it.

Black History Fact: Sponsoreed by the African American Associatio

In 1870, during Reconstruction, the first African American elected to the U.S. Senate was Hiram Rhodes Revels from Mississippi. Revels takes the former seat of Jefferson Davis. He was born to free parents in Fayetteville, N.C., on September 1, 1822 and he died January 16, 1901 in Aberdeen, Mississippi.
Fourteen-year-old attends classes at Coastal

by Aundres Perkins

When the word "genius" is spoken of in a conversation most people would think of Einstein, Socrates or Aristotle. Add another name to list: Joshua Voltin. Joshua Voltin is a fourteen-year-old teenager from North Myrtle Beach. He is only in the eighth grade and is earning college credits at our very own Coastal Carolina University.

Dr. Rodger Voltin, Joshua's father, says that he first knew his son was gifted when he was three years old. It was then that the three year old could recite all of the dinosaurs from the movie "Jurassic Park." From there Joshua would go on to excel in everything he did, needing little help at all. According to Dr. Voltin, Joshua loves to figure things out on his own with very little guidance from him and Nancy Voltin, his wife.

"It was as easy as raising a kid could be. He is very well behaved and just like any other teenager," said Dr. Voltin.

Besides being very intelligent, Joshua enjoys being a teenager. He is in sports such as karate, kickboxing, football, as well as his academic team. He also likes to play with his friends, read and have fun. Joshua enjoys spending time with his classmates at the Cino Grille.

"The college life is pretty cool, the only downside is having to carry my stuff across the campus," stated Joshua. Joshua has a normal college schedule with two classes before and one after lunch. Afterwards, he joins his academic team at North Myrtle Beach. Speaking of books, this is the first year that Joshua feels like he actually has to study. His physical science class at North Myrtle Beach High School is the only one that does not come naturally to him. Even in his classes at Coastal, he breezes through with little effort.

Dr. Voltin plans to be a Biomedical Engineer, dealing with prosthetics.

"Joshua's mom, Nancy, said that the first knew her son was above average after he took a standardized test in the second grade.

"I am very proud of my son. I think he gets it from his father's side of the family, where his grandfather helped design the computer chip for the Texas Instrument 83 Calculators. If any of our other kids are having trouble with their work, they just go to their brother. I like that. I haven't had to help him with school work since second grade," said Mrs. Voltin.

The next time genius is the topic of your conversation, remember Joshua Voltin, the fourteen-year-old, extraordinary teen from right here in our own back yard.

What is? Why is the world over there rather than nothing?
What is the meaning of the word "wisdom"? What can we live for?
What is art? Does true beauty exist? Are values relative?
Who is a person? How do we know what is good?
What is reality, and what things can be described as real?
What is wisdom? How should I live? What is true?
Do some things exist independently of our perception? How do we see the beautiful things that arise from the everyday? Do we have free will?
What is the world that we are in? How do words relate to us? What do the words in my mind mean?
Getting to know Krista Kimble

by Kyle B. Ward

I sat down and had a talk with one of CCU’s better blockers on the volleyball team. She came here in 2002 from the Laguna Beach area of California, and was a high school teammate of Jennifer Hampton.

Kyle B. Ward: What was your first impression of Coastal coming into your freshman year?

Krista Kimble: In one way, it’s a lot different than home. There’s still a beach here and at home. The lifestyle are different here. It’s like a slower pace down here.

KBW: How did you hear about Coastal?

KK: My club volleyball coach, Coach Bauer recruited Jennifer and I; she went here on her recruiting trip then I did.

KBW: How has CCU changed in the last several years?

KK: There’s a lot more people. Myrtle Beach is growing a lot. The area is growing with more hotels and restaurants, but I love it.

KBW: What are the advantages of Coastal being able to bring in players from outside in Arizona and California?

KK: We play volleyball different out there. It’s a different style of play in California.

KBW: How has having a high school teammate helped you out?

KK: It was nice coming in to actually like, know someone and have something in common with. With her being a setter and me being in the middle, it’s easier for her to set me the ball and so I know how to hit.

KBW: How do you prepare mentally for a normal game day?

KK: I get a lot of sleep and then I think about the game and if I’m laying down, I think certain hits, getting stats, playing defense.

KBW: What other schools recruited you?

KK: Arizona schools and Villanova. I was set on Villanova, but one of my grades in high school didn’t go through so they didn’t let me in.

KBW: If you weren’t playing volleyball what sport would you be playing?

KK: Probably soccer. I’d played for 10 years then I quit in high school so I could play volleyball.

KBW: What’s the best part of Coastal Carolina?

KK: I love the beach and I like my teammates a lot. We hung out a lot on and off the court; a lot of us live together.

KBW: Is it a good thing to be that close-knit as a team?

KK: It’s good because there’s not that much drama. Girls get involved with drama very easily. Everyone gets along very well.

KBW: Who would you say your role model is?

KK: Probably my parents I guess. They come out here all the time and are really supportive. They’re hard workers and how they’ve raised my brother and myself, I’d like to do that someday.

KBW: What’s the best advice you’ve received?

KK: Don’t give up because you have to fight for your position; there’s someone behind you so you have to keep fighting.

KBW: What does CCU have to do to win the Big South?

KK: We have to play together as a team with intensity.

KBW: If your career was over today, how do you sum your Coastal experience?

KK: It was awesome; I’ve made some best friends that I’ll have for the rest of my life. I’ve met some great people. I’ve had an awesome four years.

KBW: Where do you see yourself in five years?

KK: I’d like to be maybe in New York City and have a nice job, not married or anything. I’d like to write somewhere and be on my own.

Supreme Court nominee Miers draws criticism

by Becky Powell

As Supreme Court nominee, George W. Bush was busy trying to handle a wayward Middle Eastern country, desperately mopping up floodwaters from two major hurricanes that hit the Gulf Coast, and with oil prices skyrocketing, there's very little free time.

Unfortunately, the Supreme Court is about to lose its second member in a month’s time. Chief Justice William Rehnquist died earlier in September, while Justice Sandra Day O’Connor is retiring. A new Chief Justice, John Roberts, was recently confirmed by the Senate. With Democrats worried about the possibility of a truly conservative Supreme Court, Republicans on Capitol Hill are also becoming equally cautious of overstepping their boundaries.

The nation is in a rather fragile state as the country begins to mopping up floodwaters from two major hurricanes that hit the Gulf Coast, with oil prices skyrocketing, there's very little free time.

Regardless of shoe size, her voting record has been called into question on Capitol Hill. While Bush insists that her faith-based philosophies will prevent her from straying to a “different viewpoint in 20 years’ time,” a look at her voting record 20 years ago would reveal that she’s only been a conservative Christian political activist for half her life. With that said, many on the Hill—both democrats and republicans—question whether her credentials and Bush’s “just trust me” attitude are enough of a reason to confirm Miers to the most powerful court in the country.

The citizens may have to wait and see what’s on the table for Thanksgiving, which is the tentative date that most republican Senators have set to push for a confirmation by.

Jensen-Spencer and Meyers Dominate on the road; CCU 3-0 in Big South Play

by Kyle B. Ward

CCU scored two wins on the road as they improved to an 8-6 record, winning in four games against both Birmingham Southern (Friday, Sep. 30) and UNC-Asheville (Sunday, Oct. 2), as conference play begins to heat up.

Katherine Jensen-Spencer recorded her sixth double-double of the season with 19 kills and 12 digs. Jennifer Hampton contributed 4 assists for the Lady Chants in their road victory. Alicia Meyers also tallied a double-double with 11 kills and 17 digs. CCU out-blocked BSU with 14, while the Panthers tallied six. Krista Kimble led the charge with eight blocks for the Lady Chants.

The Chanticleer
Championship hopes hindered for men's soccer

by Jeff Abramowitz
Following the Sunday, Sept. 25 double overtime standstill to the College of Charleston, Coastal Carolina's record dropped 3-4-1. Eight games into the season and lacking a 5-00 record, hopes of the Big South Championship continue to be within the grasp of this youthful Chanticleer squad.

"We have lost the battle of the defensive side of the ball, however I feel like our young players are really starting to come around," Coach Shaun Docking explained while looking forward to the first conference match-up with Birmingham-Southern.

Birmingham-Southern has glorified this match, and has turned this annual meeting into a rivalry, which could have been a pivotal point for this Chanticleer team's season. However, the Panthers defeated the Chanticleers by a narrow margin on Saturday, Oct. 1 by a score of 3-2. This hard-hitting loss dropped the Chants' record to a disappointing and mediocre 3-5-1.

Prior to this match with Birmingham-Southern the Chants have taken five of the last six matches from the Panthers. However, this year proved to tell a different story. The Panthers returned all of their starters, except for Jamie Holmes, and gathered a more efficient record than the Chanticleers.

The Panthers were also equipped with the Big South Player of the Week in Gino Cosolino who came off a brilliant performance, which resulted in a hat trick against UNC Asheville. Even though Cosolino only managed one goal during the game, he still established an abundance of match-up problems for the Chanticleers.

The Chants lost to Radford 2-1 on Tuesday, Oct. 4.

A victory against Birmingham-Southern would not have solidified the team's Big South Championship goal; however, this conference win would have delivered the team enough momentum to roll into Winthrop in two weeks. Responding to adversity will be the next challenge for these youthful Chanticleers.

On Notice: Sports column

by Kyle B. Ward
October is one of the best months of the year. It's a month where a year's worth of sweat and toil comes down to one moment in time. You find out if teams like the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Washington Redskins are for real. The Yankees will find out if they paid enough for a World Series ring. The Red Sox will find out if their bullpen will carry them to repeat as champions.

October is a rite-of-passage month in college football. Is Penn State for real? I say no, their offense will peter out eventually, and oh yeah, there's the Ohio State University is on Penn's schedule. Can USC continue on its winning streak? I say yes, but if they face a fast, physical defense that can get to the ball carrier in an instant, then they'll have problems. That defense lives in Blacksburg, Va., and is the Virginia Tech Hokies. They gave the Trojans their only scar in 2004 and should things go as they are supposed to, then these two teams should meet up again in Pasadena. It's October, so anything can happen in college football.

The Red Sox again exercised more Yankee demons when they pounded the Yanks 10-1 in the 27th anniversary of that Bucky "Fringip" Dent home run at Fenway Park. The Red Sox should handle the Pale Hose in four games, but it will be interesting to see how the bullpen performs. I'll call it the Papelbon Effect; he should be a factor in the playoffs. The Angels should handle the Yanks in game four; too much Vladimir Guerrero will sink New York once again.

The National League is easy to pick. The Braves won't make it past Houston; Clemens and Pettitte are just too much to handle for that minor league team in Atlanta. Florida should have won the NL East, but Luis Castillo and Juan Pierre weren't consistent enough to be in it in the end. The Cardinals should beat San Diego easily, but Jake Peavy might have a thing or two on that one.

Hockey returns this month, and honestly I missed it. It will be more fun to watch, but it's on the Outdoor Life Network, so it will be tough to find on the channel circuit. The NHL is excited about the arrival of phenom Sidney Crosby. Anytime a guy is compared to be the next "Great One," then maybe he could be special. He teams up with Mario Lemieux on the Pittsburgh Penguins, so they will be fun to watch.

It's that time again...

New York Jets- How can they go from being a contender to a pretender in just four games? That's easy; never draft a kicker so early. You turn to Brooks Bollinger to save you? You've got to be kidding me. Hello Matt Leinart, the Jets are now on the clock.

Florida Marlins- So bad how the season faded here. Al Burnett was two innings away from earning an extra 50 grand, but he was basically kicked off the team for some post-game comments. Jack McKennon is out as manager. With Burnett gone, look for C. J. Todd Frazier to make noise in 2006. Jeremy Hermida shows promise with the bat, so a Hermida-Pierre-Cabrera outfield sounds daunting to me. If Pinella wants to win now, he'll come to the Marlins, but sources say it could be Joe Girardi that gets the job.

Oakland A's- See what happens when you trade away your two aces? Tim Hudson and Mark Mulder are in the postseason and the A's are planning cruisers. Since they don't open their wallets in Oakland, it'll be tough to compete for free agency. Huston Street should win AL Rookie of the Year. Their farm system is great but they just lost too many people to injuries and free agency to be contenders.

And it's only minutes from Myrtle Beach with its beautiful beaches, golf courses, endless variety of live entertainment, and other attractions.

Kiskadee's spacious villas and stylish townhomes feature spectacular pool or natural views. They're all maintenance-free, as well, so you can spend your free time relaxing by the pool, working out in the fitness center, playing volleyball, or enjoying a nearby cookout. And for golf enthusiasts, memberships are available through Wild Wing Plantation.
