The fall was a tumultuous season for Coastal sports. It’s fitting that CCU is a coastal school, because many of the sports at CCU experienced seasons like waves.

Let’s begin with the football team. The Chants entered the season with three convincing wins and one loss. They had steady success throughout the season and slowly swelled down going into championship season. It’s fitting that the Chants entered the season with three convincing wins and one loss. They had steady success throughout the season and slowly swelled down going into championship season.

The volleyball team’s season resembled a day in the surf that’s good for learning. Lots of little waves. An up-and-down season of two or three wins, followed by two or three losses, left the women with a 13-20 record. The young team surely learned from this season.

Both Men’s and Women’s Tennis teams had steady-growing spring seasons, leading to appearances in the Interscholastic Tennis Association Carolinas Regional. The golf teams also had steady fall seasons, with multiple top-10 finishes for the men and second and seventh place ties for the women.

The student voice of the Carolina Student Daily, a blog that highlights young and upcoming Republican politicians.

Young Republicans say they have been following election news closely, with a 19-year-old student saying, “It is a myth that college students are inherently liberal. College students are inherently aypathetic, and the Republican Party just doesn’t spend enough time trying to activate them,” said Tom Schultz, Editor of theiringrepublican.com, a blog that highlights up and coming Republican politicians.

“Outside of Barack Obama or Ron Paul, I haven’t seen a candidate go out of their way to engage young voters. Though young voters seem to be paying less attention to the election cycle in 2012, the divide between young and old voters that formed during the 2008 election is as wide as it has been since 1980. In both elections, young people are voting heavily more Democrat and people over 65 voting Republican.”

“This is not a new trend, this is a pretty consistent thing,” said Holle Tankersley, Associate Professor of Politics at Coastal Carolina University. “Republican candidates simply don’t talk about the issues that are important to 18 to 29 year olds.”

While President Obama’s support has slipped across all demographics since he took office in 2008, he is a statistical tie with Mitt Romney, his色调 local opponent in the poll, for the 2012 election. He still holds a sizable advantage among young voters despite their seeming disinterest.

Young voters are not particularly excited about Mitt Romney, or Herman Cain, or for that matter Newt Gingrich, Tankersley said. “So I think there’s a big question mark as to whether they will go for the Republican candidate or they just won’t go at all. Young voters’ disaffiliation with President Obama may stem from his failure to follow through on campaign promises, such as closing the Guantanamo Bay detention center and his continuation of many key Bush-era policies, like the PATRIOT Act, according to Bonnie Kristian, Director of Communications at Young Americans for Liberty.

“Young democrats voted for Obama, expecting him to be a peace president, but he has actually increased our war presence abroad,” she said. “Despite the rhetoric, whenever a candidate gets into office, they usually just perpetuate the same policies... It’s the culture.”

Or it could just be that older voters are more politically savvy, not as easily swayed by slogans and imagery. “There is a bit of a learning curve when you get older,” Kristian said. “They’ve seen the lack of change in Washington, and they’ve come to expect it.”

Female to male ratios vary among different colleges and degrees throughout the U.S. Unlike 30 years ago, women are the majority percentage attending college compared to men. Gender ratios in college also determine the ratios in the workplace.

With the exception of single sex technology and cosmetology schools, females and males are able to apply to any school of their choice. In 2008, women made up 49 percent of graduate school enrollment. For the first time ever, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill recorded 60 percent females last February.

THE DOG DAYS OF COLLEGE

SHANE NORRIS

Over the past year and a half, I've juggled the task of being a dog owner and a college student, and it's helped reinforce something I've believed for most of my life. Unless you have a significant amount of time to invest in one, do not get a dog.

Don't get me wrong, I'm an animal lover. I have been my whole life, and my family has always had plenty of pets, usually rescue. In high school, I worked everyday at a boarding kennel and my sister has worked at either a vet or rescue shelter for the past eight years. I think it's safe to say I know a thing or two about pets. I know it seems contradictory, since I have a dog, but I didn't plan on getting one until I was out of college. Then my aunt passed away my sophomore year and I promised her I would take care of her dog.

All that said, I want to recommend the average college student to stray away (no pun intended) from a large pet. There are three main factors that I base this on: time, finances and space.

Time: A dog, especially a puppy, requires an immense amount of time to take care of. You have to walk it, play with it, make sure it gets fed, potty train it, keep it intellectually stimulated and just be its companion. I could fill a whole page with the negative effects of a dog that is crated or locked up because the owner is leaving all the time for class, sports, parties, etc. They develop separation anxiety and war things up when you're gone, they become anxious when they aren't right on top of you. It just ruins a dog. Think about it, if a zoo were to take a tiger or elephant and keep them in a cage just big enough for them to stand up in for at least 50 percent of the day, most people would find it inhumane. What about a person locked in a space the size of a small closet for half the day or more? So why would it be ok to do that to a dog?

Finance: A dog is expensive. I have a lab mix and he goes through about 20 lbs of food a month, not to mention vet check-ups and other random things like toys, shampoo and collars. All that stuff adds up fast on a college budget.

Space: Most students are living in a dorm or apartment or at best a house with a small, unfenced yard. None of these are good places for a dog to live. Dogs, especially a medium or large breed, need a yard for daily exercise and using the bathroom. This goes in time too, because if you don't have a yard, you're going to have to walk your dog every time it needs to go out.

What I'm trying to say is pets are great and I recommend them to people with the time and financial stability for one, but in college you're probably gonna be happier without the additional burden, and the dog will be happier with an owner that can dedicate their time to it.

ANSWERING THE CALL

CHAD YATES

One of my most recent editorials used my friend's motorcycle accident to portray the message that life is precious, emphasizing that anything can happen at any time. I've given much thought figuring out what I wanted to take from the most recent experience that inspired this editorial, and the main thing I took from it is that I truly appreciate for those who dedicate themselves to do what the average person does.

On our connecting flight from Charlotte to Orlando for the National College Media Convention, a man unexpectedly collapsed in the back of the plane. In a circumstance where sure profanolement could have ensued, the man sitting in the row behind me, who we later learned to be an EMT, calmly got up from his seat when passengers' panicked reactions indicated a problem. Our plane was set to land at 4:00 p.m., but due to the medical emergency we received priority landing and ended up in Orlando nearly a full hour early. When we landed, ambulances and fire trucks were already lined up on the runway. Thankfully the man's condition was enough in control that the EMT was able to stabilize him while we were in the air.

Talking to my faculty advisor while the EMT tended to the fallen man, we couldn't help think about what we would do in that circumstance if one of us were in that situation alone. As someone with no experience in the medical field, I can only imagine that I would have been relatively incapable of tending to such a situation. Thankfully that wasn't the case, and there was someone present to help the man when he needed it most.

Eyes to the main point I'm trying to make is there is something special about someone who does something solely to help others. If they weren't around to help when we need it most, we more than likely wouldn't be around to do what we love.

Tips on how to succeed on your final exams

COURTNEY MULLIS

Final exams are stressful for everyone, new freshmen and upperclassmen alike. The best way to relieve exam stress is to be prepared. If you begin studying immediately, you will not have as much to worry about.

To begin preparing for your exams, it is important that you find a place where you can focus. For some people, the library offers the fewest distractions.

Be sure to use multiple resources when studying. This may include your class notes, other students’ notes, the textbook, previous assignments, or Internet resources. Even though it can be tempting to skip classes, be sure you attend your final class periods. Professors may share important information about the exam. Study in short sessions. If you study some, study hard.

Take a break, then study more. That way you are less likely to become overwhelmed with information. Schedule time to meet with others and study in a group. This makes you accountable to people other than yourself and therefore motivates you to actually study. Whether working with a group or by yourself, pay close attention to any information included on study guides. Professors would not waste your time or their own time making study guides if they were not relevant to the exam.

Do not stay up all night cramming for your exams. It is more important that you be well rested if you want to receive good grades.

It is important that you eat something before each exam so that you are not distracted by hunger.

Take all necessary materials to your exam. This may include pens or pencils, paper, a calculator, or the textbook. Find out from your professor what you will need.

Arrive to the exam early. Also, do not rush. It can be tempting to get over with and begin your break, but utilizing the entire exam period can improve your score.

No matter how difficult your exams may be, try to relax.

Good luck!

Glass container companies employ about 18,000 workers and represent a $5.5 billion industry, with 49 glass manufacturing plants in 23 states.

Recycled glass is substitutable for up to 70 percent of raw materials.

One domestic automotive manufacturer uses the equivalent of 50 million PET bottles annually to make components of new cars and trucks.

When you recycle one ton of paper, air pollution is decreased by 80 pounds compared to traditional virgin fiber processes.

HAVE NOFEAR,

STUDENT LOAN
HELP IS HERE

With programs to help pay student loans, you aren’t alone in the battle.

Coastal Carolina University is home to approximately 5,084 students. Of those students, all percent are out of state. With an out-of-state tuition at nearly $22,000 per year, a good portion of those 48 percent have drawn out rather hefty loans to further their education.

According to studentaid.ed.gov, the average rate for a subsidized Stafford Loan is set at 3.4 percent. If a student accrues a total of $20,000 in student loans over the course of their college education, and makes a monthly payment of $200, it will take them nine years and nine months to pay those loans off, according to money-zme.com.

To say the least, that’s a lot of money out of your pocket. Over a lot of time.

Let’s be honest. We all know that people choose to go to college to make more money. Sure, the education and environment are fantastic, but the primary factor is the dough. If it weren’t, saying that colleges wouldn’t have a debt that can often times pursued would be a fairly safe assumption.

But have no fear. You don’t have to empty your pockets every month to payoff off your college education. There are many programs that offer loan forgiveness or loan deferment in exchange for employment.

“I did Teach for America, and it was honestly one of the best things I could have done,” said Caitlin Sweeney, a 2011 CCU graduate of the Early Childhood Education program. “I committed to teach in a low-income school for four years, and deference programs, visit finaid.org or money-zme.com.

Along with Teach for America, there are many programs that provide assistance in paying student loans, such as: Peace Corps, Volunteers in Service to America, AmeriCorps, and Army National Guard, among many others. The amount of aid varies based off of the program and the student. Many of these programs will also help even further your education by providing money to pay for graduate school as long as you commit to teaching at that specific program.

So before you jump to conclusions and prepare yourself for a long road of monthly payments, consider some options to help yourself out. Don’t make the road longer than it needs to be.

For more information on loan forgiveness and deference programs, visit finaid.org/loans/forgiveness.

Within six hours, deserts recieve more energy from sun than humankind consumes within a year, according to the Desertec Foundation. The foundation is described as a global civil society initiative aiming to shape a sustainable future, according to the foundation's official website. The foundation was established in 2009 as a non-profit foundation growing out of a network of scientists, politicians and economists from areas around the Mediterranea (who together defied the concept.

Desertec Foundation, www.desertec.org, describes how the foundation is working on fast global implementation of the Desertec Concept, which is a comprehensive solution combating global warming.

According to the website, Desertec aims to establish reliable energy supply and promote development and security.

"It's really exciting to learn about the plans made by Desertec," said Lindsey Proctor, senior Music major. "We need more foundations like this because, in the long run, the plans created can benefit us and the environment.

The Desertec Foundation is made up of about 20 staff members, Regional Network Coordinators and a large global community of supporters, and is active around the world, according to the website.

Middle Eastern and Northern African countries, known as MENA nations, are investing millions in renewable energy and are keen Desertec investment points.

"It's good to know nations most concerned deal are able to contribute so much to conserving and using clean energy," said Alex Anderson, senior Sociology major. "Hopefully the actions of the MENA nations can motivate the United States and other nations to invest more in clean energy"

North African countries, head of the Societal group in Algeria, told a press conference, "The total sum of electricity production development between 2011 and 2021 is nearly $324 billion, a portion of which will be dedicated to renewable energy".

Bouterra also said during the conference, "By 2020, some 40 percent of electricity production, for national consumption will come from renewable energy"

Currently, most electricity produced in Algeria is through natural gas. However, earlier this year, the country launched a hybrid plant that boosts gaxed production with solar panels.

Algeria announced plans of investments of more than $29 billion in renewable electricity over the next 20 years, bringing MENA nations to the forefront of climate action worldwide.

BIKE LOCK PROVIDES SECURITY NOT WATER

Bottle Locks on the Rise

ROBERT MUSIC

Bike locks are a necessary evil. Bike thieves are choosing to bike to campus, and sometimes bicycle locks can be bulky and difficult to work with.

"The new bottle locks are designed to appear to look like a regular water bottle at first glance, but are actually a bottle equipped with five feet of plastic-coated braided steel inside.

This bottle lock fits comfortably in any standard water bottle cage, comes with two keys and is secured with a built-in lock. "If you use a U-lock on your bike, which has to be clipped into frame-mounted bracket," said Kyle Dickson, junior Communication major. "I would much rather use a bottle lock because it looks better and overall more convenient."}

These locks also come equipped with a compartment in the bottom of the bottle perfect for spare change and other small items.

"Hopefully this lock will be able to hit the market soon," said Marissa Terr, senior Education major. "Its definitely going to throw off a good amount of bike crooks thinking they were about to score a bike and drink."

This product is a great option for students who find themselves having to stuff bulky locks into their backpacks already overloaded with books.

The Knack Bottle Locks is not yet for sale, as the company is still seeking a distributor. They plan on marking the lock at around $34.

What are your other commitments on campus?
I recently joined the student government. I am secretary to the Vice President of Public Relations. I’m also on the Parking Appeals Board.

What is something you learned about leadership?
When placed under certain circumstances, people learn to stand up. Things are not going to get done on their own; someone needs to step up.

How does your organization get involved in the community?
We raise money for our philanthropy, Autism Speaks, but we try to get involved as much as possible with philanthropic events. Last year, we made and sold cookbooks.

What is your favorite part about Greek Life?
The networking aspect. It also opens a lot of doors for you. I would have never joined SGA if it wasn’t for Alpha Xi Delta.

GREEK LIFE GETS SERIOUS WITH GPA
CASEY RUTKOWSKI

Despite the fun often associated with Greek organizations, these organizations are privileges held on a college campus and require academic maintenance to maintain the university. There are awards given out to Greek organizations for maintaining the highest GPA of all the existing organizations. The GPA requirement begins even before the admittance begins, with the academic requirement and begins with recruitment.

"When recruitment was approaching, I learned that there was a GPA requirement and it did not change what I thought about Greek Life but it motivated me and made me work harder," said Lynsey Deulde, a member of Gamma Phi Beta. "Not only do you have to maintain and do well, but also for the future by creating enduring study habits on which you can rely on as you grow."

Currently, there are 30 active brothers on campus. They strive to support their philanthropy, Youth AIDS. Last year they sold wristbands and gave all proceeds to their philanthropy. The brothers also recently decided to leave the traditional fraternity persona of pledging and adopted 'balanced man.' This is a three-semester challenge where each semester represents a letter: Sigma, Phi and Epsilon. As they progress through the challenges, they learn more about the fraternity, including traditions and secrets.

"We are the first chapter in the nation to voluntarily make the switch," said Bruno. The fraternity’s colors are people, red and gold, and all brothers live by the red door policy. If there is ever a Sig Ep house or a red door around campus, it is automatically open to all Sig Eps.

Sigma Phi Epsilon was the first fraternity to charter a chapter in every state in America. Coastal Carolina’s Sig Ep chapter also has the highest GPA nationally.
CHRISTMAHANAKWANZAKA

ALEX ALIMAN

"It’s that time of year again. Families are putting up their Christmas trees and children are asking for their Christmas lists for Santa. What about the other holidays during this wonderful time of year and the true meaning behind religious holidays?" says Jawannakakk and Hanukkah are just two of the various holidays celebrated this time of year other than Christmas.

Still, not much is known about Kwanzaa and Hanukkah.

Some may not believe there really is a meaning behind the religious holidays. "(They are) just other reasons for the holiday season," said Ayriel Lee Jackson, junior undeclared major.

Others believe, but don’t necessarily know a lot about Hanukkah or Kwanzaa.

"Well, all I know about Hanukkah is that it’s a Jewish holiday. They celebrate for seven days I think. Kwanzaa is a holiday that pro-African-Americans mostly celebrate the value of life and family," said Deborah Evans, junior Music major.

According to the 2010 Annual Founder’s Kwanzaa Message, it originated from the Black Freedom Movement and aims to focus on the good of the world. Kwanzaa is an equal celebration of family, community and culture.

"Hanukkah or Chanukah is an eight-day Jewish celebration called the Festival of Lights," said Cheryl Rhodes, professor of Philosophy and Religious Studies. "The celebration began after Antiochus IV persecuted and massacred the Jews as well as defiling the oil of the Temple. The Menorah was supposed to burn all night every night but miraculously it burned for eight days. The eight-day festival of Hanukkah was begun to celebrate the miracle.

Not much needs to be said for Christmas, but a friendly reminder of the true meaning of Christmas never hurts.

"This season is full of those that focus on the gift of God’s son, Jesus, and make attempts to celebrate this wonderful truth through tradition, ceremony, etc.,” said John Paul, pastor for Solid Rock Ministries in Myrtle Beach.

"Some celebrate it as a time to be with family. Some celebrate it as a time to give. Others may celebrate it as a time free from responsibility."

Paul sees the true meaning behind Christmas.

"As one continually focused on sacrifice, selling all and giving, worth considering others, leading those in my influence to the gift of Jesus and His offering of salvation, I am encouraged that the true meaning of Christmas really is Jesus,” said Paul.

So remember when you’re celebrating your religious holidays this year that there is much more to this time of year than presents.

MUSIC DEPARTMENT PERFORMS 12TH ANNUAL HOLIDAY CONCERT

KRISTA GIERLACH

The 12th Annual Holiday Concert presented by Coastal Carolina University’s Department of Music took place on Nov. 20 at 7:30 p.m. In addition to the members of the CCU Concert and Chamber choirs, directed by Dr. Francis Sinclair and assisted by Rebecca Rollins, the department was honored to have Carolina Forest High School Choral Ensemble, directed by Krag McElroy and assistant directed by Lindsay Link, as well as the Long Bay Symph- ony on instrumentals as special guests. The show opened with the Christmas portion of G.F. Handel’s famous piece "Messiah," which was performed by the Coastal Carolina University Chamber choir with members of the CCU Voice Faculty as soloists on various movements.

Voice Faculty member, Dr. Jeffrey Jones, conveyed much excitement in being a part of this production. "When I sing recitals, it is usually just with piano. These types of productions are great experience to work with a group of instrumentals," said Jones. "The music comes to life in a fascinating way when you hear the different colors the instruments provide."

After a brief intermission, combined choirs with the Long Bay Symphony and voice faculty soloists performed Antonio Vivaldi’s "Gloria."

The Coastal Carolina University Concert Choir of over 50 members followed with three Christmas songs. Then, Carolina Forest High School’s Choral Ensemble entertained the crowd with selections from "Christmas in the Air," "Deck the Halls" and a fun mash-up of holiday songs sung by the boy’s ensemble. CCU’s Chamber Choir returned to sing two last songs before the Grand Finale of combined choirs singing "Silent Night" from "Messiah."

The concert sold out. "I enjoyed the concert," said Amanda Massoni, senior Business Management major. "It really helped me unwind after a long day of studying and got me in the Christmas spirit." Sophomore Design and Technology major AJ Gardner agreed. "[The show] was a fantastic way to kick off the holiday season. The concert really showcases the hard work and talent at Coastal’s Music Department."

Stephen Williams, a graduate and member of the Chamber and Concert Choirs, also explained his enjoyment in being part of the show and performing specifically the difficult Han- del’s "Messiah." "Being a student here for the past six years, I have realized that the choirs have grown not only in numbers but in musical maturity."

This year’s 12th annual Holiday Concert directly reflected the development of the de- partment through the number of tickets sold, as well as the quality of performance. "The Department of Music is a thriving and growing part of the university. We currently have approximately 100 majors. Areas of special- ization include performance (instruments include voice, brass, woodwinds, percussion, electric and double bass), teacher preparation and general studies," said Jones. "We are proud of the ensemble experiences our students are involved in, such as [Tuesday] evening’s choral concert."

The Chanticleer's football season is off to a winning start thanks to solid performances from Anthony Raffa and a handful of other contributors. Raffa, a Senior from the Sea Isle, New Jersey, is averaging 17 points per game this season including two 20-point performances. His play offensively has been seamless, but his defensive capabilities are equally impressive. The Chanticleers need to ride this season to make it to the CAA Tournament.

TJ'S TAKE THE 18 HOLES OF CHANTICLEER FOOTBALL
TJ SUNDBERG
Since The Chanticleer went on a one-month hiatus, I obviously had some free time on my hands. And because we reside in lovely Myrtle Beach, I decided to do what most males would do with their time on the links. The funny thing about my time on the links was it resembled the Chanticleer's football season with perfection.

Here's the scenario:
Holes one through six resulted in a couple of bogeys, a double bogey on the hardest hole on the course, a lucky roll binder and two pars. Sounds like the Chanticleer's 2-1 start to me, with two impressive wins and a horrific 59-0 loss to the University of Georgia. But it was Georgia, the hardest hole on the course.

Holes seven through fifteen are usually the blowup holes for the average golfer. This is where I have my chunk shots, skulled chips, and drives that are supposed to land on the fairway but end up in the Jimmy John's parking lot off the course.

With a combined margin of victory of 85 points in the first two games, the team wasn't really tested. However, we were able to see some distinct differences from the previous season. Gradnigo gave us an NBA-level athlete, who can score from all over the court, leaving the crowd's mouth ajar with a put-back layup as the clock struck zero. Honored for his performance with a number one spot on SportsCenter, it was a big moment for Coastal athletics. Raffa also played a great game, matching Gradnigo with 21 points in the win. After two big wins, Coastal fell into a trap game over Thanksgiving break and lost a tough one at Florida International University.

"It was a tough one; we just have to play a little flat," said Gradnigo. The Chants stand at 5-1 entering conference play. They host the Virginia Military Institute Thursday, December 1st at Kimble Arena.

STURG START FOR WOMEN'S HOOPS
KEITH SHEBLY

After a disappointing season last year for the CUC Women's Basketball team, they were ready to hit the ground running this time around. With a good mix of returners and a solid freshman class, the Lady Chants feel they have a team to compete. It looks like that early as they reeled off three big convincing wins; one over College of Charleston.

The team has some exciting players out on the court as well. Sophomore Angelica Henry has a stellar hand and looks to get the team invigorated. Freshmen Shaia Cole and A.J. Jordan also have the ability to fill it up, something our team has lacked previous years. Big bodies inside in Taylor Epley and Shonika Maddox provide balance to a team with good guard play.

The team currently stands at 4-1 with a home game coming up on December 15th before a big game against South Carolina State in the Myrtle Beach Convention Center on December 18th.

WARRIORS OPEN WITH A STATEMENT
DAVID TEIXEIRA

The South Carolina Warriors are already making a name for themselves in Myrtle Beach. Through the first three games of the season, the team has won by an average of over 40 points, and is now ranked number 4 in the ARA. A lot of the success of this new franchise is due to four Chanticleer alumni on the roster.

In the Warriors most recent game against the 10th ranked Carolina Cougars, Coastal Carolina alumus Joseph Harris led the team to a near 50 point victory. Jack Little lent a helping hand in the victory, scoring 14, while Mario Edwards added 12.

"I honestly think we have a chance to win it all in our very first year," said Harris. "We have a lot of really good players that complement each other and play their roll very well."

Harris also spoke about the privilege of being able to play where he played his college ball.

"It feels like I never left, the Coastal fans and community is great."

And while the Chanticleer fans are still following him, he is following the Chanticleers as well.

"It's great to see how much the program has grown since I left," said Harris.

Jesse Bolick, who attended the second Warriors game against the Fayetteville Flight, enjoyed his experience.

"It was a fun, high scoring game, with a lot of entertaining plays," said Bolick.

Paige Daiflington, a CUC student and dancer for the South Carolina Warriors commented on her experience thus far with the Warriors.

"It's going to be an awesome season, our team is really good and the fans get really into it," said Daiflington.

The Warriors hope to gain more fans as the season continues and the wins pile up. The remainder of the season will be played at the North Strand Recreation Center in Little River, SC. For more information, you can visit www.swarriorsusa.com.

WHERE DID THE PAPER GO?
SHANE NORRIS & CHAD YATES

Well Coastal Carolina, it's been a while. As many of our dedicated readers have surely noticed, The Chanticleer has been out of commission since late October. We feel it is our duty to you, the reader, to explain where we've been and where we're headed.

Due to unforeseen circumstances, we had to do some reconstruction amongst our staff. Namely, hire a new Art Director and Photo Editor. The process unfortunately took a bit longer than expected, setting back our ability to print.

The good news is, however, that we have filled the positions with students more than capable of producing a paper of the top-notch quality that you've come to expect from The Chanticleer.

The Chanticleer would like to welcome Jena Kaczmareczak as our new Art Director and Courtney Moser as our new Photo Editor.

While we can't make up for the weeks lost, we would like to extend our sincerest apology to our readers and the community of Coastal Carolina. We look forward to continuing to serve you as the student voice of your beloved university.
