Don’t challenge the cinnamon

A new report from the American Academy of Pediatrics calls for people to stop doing the prank, calling it dangerous, and saying it has led to a surge in calls to U.S. poison control centers. The number of calls to poison control centers across the U.S. about teens trying to complete the prank has increased from 51 in 2011 to 222 last year. The spice is caustic, and trying to gulp it down can cause choking, throat irritation, breathing trouble and even collapsed lungs, the report said.

Big O tells daughters ‘No’

US president Barack Obama warned his daughters last week that if they get a tattoo, he and Michelle will get matching tattoos in the exact same place. Obama threatened that any tattoo his daughters, Sasha and Malia may get on their bodies, he would turn into a “family tattoo.” The Obama daughters are only 14 and 11, respectively, so the Obamas don’t have anything to worry about. At least for now.

Ladybugs, ladybugs everywhere!

72,000 ladybugs were released into the Mall of America by mall managers to combat the problem of aphids, pesky insects that feed on plants, in the mall. The mall, which is large enough to hold seven Yankee stadiums, has over 30,000 live plants, including 400 trees, which act like natural air purifiers, and the aphids cause problems for them. Instead of spraying pesticides or other chemicals inside the mall, they decided to go the natural route and release a massive amount of lady bugs.

I got a dollar, I got a dollar...

For just the fourth time in U.S. history there will be a new 100 dollar bill. The new high-tech hundred will include a blue 3-D security ribbon, and the inkwell and bell on the front will change from copper to green when the bill is tilted.

Meet The Chanticleer’s new Assistant Editor

It is I, your new Assistant Editor for the Chant. My name is Kelley McDonnell and I’m a freshman theatre major and resident of Myrtle Beach for the last 8 years. I’m thrilled to be joining the staff because now I get to be even more in the know about what’s going on around campus, something I enjoy.

I’ve noticed that most of the time, I hear about new things through people walking by me on campus, or social media. That’s so interesting to me, and I hope that students will be more open to sharing what they know with us so that we can find more information and report it for everyone to know.

This coming year, your awesome Editor, Art Director, and the rest of the student produced newspaper staff have a lot of new ideas to better serve the campus as a publication.

It's been a great year, see you this fall

It's been a pretty interesting year this year at Coastal and at The Chanticleer. I've gotten to meet some awesome people and witness some great things.

Along with the campus as a whole, we have grown immensely as a newspaper this year, as you might have noticed with the changes we've made.

We have tried a lot of new things this year, some were good ideas, some were bad. Some things stuck and others didn't. We do all these things to try and produce the best newspaper we possibly can.

We don’t want to put out a newspaper each week that students are just going to ignore or flip through and discard immediately. We want this to be something people are excited about reading. We want people to want to read what we write, otherwise, what are we doing it for? Right?

I know the easiest thing for people to do is criticize our work and point out grammatical errors or typos, but we are trying. Really hard. And we are learning with each issue we produce.

I am proud of everyone who has been a part of The Chanticleer this year, and that includes you, our faithful readers, as well.

It honestly makes my day when I see someone in the hallway actually reading the stories we write, or when I go into a building and have to refill the newspapers because they are all gone.

Next year we hope to build off the successes we had this year and expand The Chanticleer media in all sorts of new and exciting ways.

How neat is that? Hope to see you there.

- Kelly McDonnell

It is both cliché and an understatement to say the events that took place in Boston on April 15th were tragic or horrific after two explosions left three dead and roughly 170 injured.

It did in fact seem as if the world had stopped turning that Monday afternoon as the attention of every American was fixed on their TV’s, cell phones, and computer screens.

The event has been described as one of the worst acts of terror on United States soil since the attacks of September 11, 2001 and constant coverage of the event flooded America’s airwaves for the entire following week.

The 24-hour news networks capitalized on the tragedy with constant irrelevant reporting, false information, backtracking and over dramatized nonsense that interrupted police activity and badgered victims’ family members for days.

It was a sad and pathetic week for American broadcast journalism.

While the events in Boston unfolded, the rest of the world did, in fact, continue to turn and yet coverage remained focused on repeating minute details of the bombing investigation and interviews with anyone that appeared in the same high school year book as the suspects.

The week of April 15th was one for the record books when it comes to tragedy and significant world events, many of which went virtually unnoticed thanks to the persistent fear mongering of our cable news networks.

For those of you who are curious, The Chanticleer has compiled a short list of events that may have deserved a little more attention than they received over the last two weeks.

April 15 – 33 killed by car bombs throughout Iraqi cities

Days before Iraqi citizens would be lining up for provincial ballots with 450 candidates, one of the first tests of the Iraqi democratic capabilities since the end of the U.S. occupation in December of 2011.

Attacks took place in Baghdad, Kirkuk and Tuz Khurmato. No group or organization has claimed responsibility for the attacks. According to Reuters one of the worst of the attacks took place Tuz Khurmato where, “four bombs targeting police patrols killed five people and wounded 67.”

Reuters also reported that, “10 people were killed by a bomb at a car market in the Baghdad Shi’ite district of Sadr City and a blast outside a cafe in Khalis, a Shi’ite district in Diyala province.”

April 17 – Senate fails to pass gun control legislation

The bipartisan background check legislation, that would expand background checks to gun shows and online sales as well as an assault weapons ban, failed to gain the 60 votes needed to bypass the filibuster rule Wednesday.

The Senate rejected the bill in a 54-45 vote to the dismay of President Barack Obama and Senators Joe Manchin (D-W. Va.) and Pat Toomey (R-Pa.).

“Shame on you,” yelled one Newtown Conn., parent to the Senate floor after the final vote was read. President Obama later responded saying that, “all in all, this was a pretty shameful day for Washington.”

Senator Manchin’s assurance of protecting the rights of gun owners fell on deaf ears in the Senate chamber, despite the reported 90 percent of gun owners who supported the measure.

“Every time I talk to somebody that’s an extremely acceptable and reasonable but a lot of people are just afraid that the government will go too far and take their rights away and I’m gonna say that that’s just not gonna happen, I’m going to fight for that that not to happen,” said Senator Manchin in late March.

April 17 – Explosion rocks West Texas community, killing 15

A fertilizer plant explosion rocked the West Texas town of Waco Wednesday night, killing 15, left roughly 200 injured and destroyed 50 homes. The blast created a crater nearly 100 feet wide and 10 feet deep, according to authorities.

Investigators are yet to indefinitely determine the cause of the blast, “but the main suspect is a potentially explosive, loosely regulated fertilizer that is seen less and less in farms across the USA,” according to USA Today.

A memorial service was held last Thursday where several members of Congress as well as President Obama were in attendance.

April 23 – France legalizes gay marriage after violent protests

Violent protests between French conservatives and riot police broke out Tuesday night shortly after the Socialist-majority assembly passed the measure 331-225. Protestors pelted police with glass bottles and metal bars in an area near museums and monuments outside the French Parliament. Riot police responded to the protesters with tear gas.

Violent attacks against gay-couples increased in recent weeks as well as threats to lawmakers, including gunpowder filled envelope to one legislature, Monday.

The American people did some pretty amazing things in wake of the horrible attack on Boston and the violence that followed in pursuit of the suspects. Americans showed their resilience and unwillingness to be swept up into the propaganda-fueled fear of the post-9/11 attacks.

They unified at sporting events, gathered at Boston churches, sent in thousands of pictures of the scene and donated thousands to the victims still suffering from their injuries. That confidence was shown when former New England Patriot Joe Andruzzi said last Thursday night at the NFL draft, “as our nation did after 9/11, we will return to normalcy.”

Welcome to Coastal Carolina University, the home of Chauncey the Chanticleer

For nearly 50 years, Coastal’s students have referred to themselves as “The Chanticleers,” but most don’t know where this name comes from and how we chose it.

Coastal Carolina University is a beautiful institution dedicated to academic excellence and phenomenal sports teams. Unfortunately, many times our mascot goes unrecognized because of its name.

Some current students and many incoming students don’t even know what a chanticleer is, nonetheless how to pronounce it.

A chanticleer is a rooster and it is pronounced “SHON-ti-clear.” So when we say “Go Chants!” we are actually saying it like “Go Shonts!”

Although established in 1954, Chauncey wasn’t always our mascot. Up until the 1960’s our athletic teams were known as the Trojans.

At this time, Coastal was a two-year branch of the University of South Carolina, and many students wanted a mascot that was similar, to but not the same as the USC Gamecock.

A group of Coastal students and their English professor, Cal E. Maddox came up with the notion of choosing the chanticleer as our mascot.

In fact, he even came up with the name of the newspaper you are reading at this very moment.

He got the idea after a story in Canterbury Tales written by the famous 14th century writer, father of English literature, Geoffrey Chaucer.

In the Nun’s Priest Tale, the chanticleer is a heroic rooster that is the strongest and most dominant in the barnyard.

“For crowing there was not his equal in all the land. His voice was merrier than the merry organ that plays in church, and his crowing from his resting place was more trustworthy than a clock.

“His comb was redder than fine coral and turreted like a castle wall, his bill was black and shone like a jet, and his legs and toes were like azure.

“His nails were whiter than the lily and his feathers were like burnished gold.”

Now you know why, in addition to “bleeding teal,” our other school colors are black (because of his bill), white (because of his nails), and gold (because of his feathers).

Coastal Carolina University’s affiliation with the University of South Carolina ended in 1993, thus establishing Coastal as its own separate institution. While Coastal could have had its choice of any new mascot, students stayed loyal to the chanticleer.

Although the image of our beloved mascot has changed over the years, the chanticleer represents Coastal’s students in their strive to come out on top in both academics and sports.

Edible Book Fair makes reading fun again

The Edible Book Fair is always an exciting time in Kimbel Library, with students getting creative to bring their favorite books to life through the art of baking.

Last week Kimbel Library held the 2013 Edible Book Fair and afterwards this year's student winners were announced.

The creations were judged by experienced culinary artists: Heather Cameron from Croissants, Michelle McMillan a cake specialist from Coccadotts, Joey Rabon from Kudzu Bakery, and Coastal's very own Rebecca Hamill an English professor and former patisserie.

We caught up with the winner for Best in Show, Vanessa Remillard, and talked with her about her Cat in the Hat cake and the Edible Book Fair experience:

Q: So how did you decide to complete? Is art your major or is baking just a side hobby, etc?
A: Well I decided to compete in the edible cake competition because I work for the Kimbel Library as a Student assistant and I figured since I am a crafty person that it would be cool to see if I could win. I also am an art studio major and I do enjoy cooking and baking as my dad was a chef and is currently a culinary arts teacher. This was my first time working with fondant and I had always wanted to create a cake that looks professional like on the cake shows on food network.

Q: How long did it take you to complete?
A: I’m not sure, but I wanted to do it last year and I always had the idea just never the time to make the edible creation.

Q: What were the guidelines of the competition?
A: The guidelines of the contest were that the creation had to be of a book and that the whole thing had to be edible.

Q: What was the judging process like? Did they walk around with clip boards? Or did they just tell you that you won over email?
A: I was not actually there for the whole judging process as I had class, but I dropped by to look at the other cakes. The judges consisted of professional local bakers and teachers with culinary experience. They did walk around with clipboards but the winning cakes were announced over the intercom within the library and they also notified us through email.

Q: What made you come up with the idea?
A: Well I had chosen to do Cat In the Hat because Dr Seuss was always one of my favorite authors as a young child.

Q: Was this your first contest like this or is this something in your territory?
A: This was my first contest dealing with and making an edible creation.

Q: What kind of prizes did you win?
A: The prize that I won for best in show was two tickets tickets to a concert of my choice at the House of Blues.

Q: Do you plan on competing next year?
A: Yes I do plan on competing next year. I had a great time making the cake and was proud to show others what I had created and what I am capable of. Though I did not win the Kindle Fire, there is always next time.

Winners of other awards included:
Most Edible -- “Apple Pie” by Kim Shegog Punniest -- “Life of Pecan Pi” by Tracy Gaskin
Best Book Structure -- “The Very Hungry Caterpillar” by Karen James
Audience Favorite -- “The Canterbury Tales” by Sue McLean

Marine science major Danielle Massie’s “The Secret Garden,” her first attempt at a fondant cake, was awarded Best Student Entry, earning her a Kindle Fire.

The prizes ranged everywhere from a Kindle Fire, movie and concert tickets, to gift certificates at Rotelli’s, Eggs Up Grill and Barnes & Noble.

Buildings aren't the only new additions coming to Coastal Carolina University.

With the hiring of April Sager as the new Program Coordinator, along with the full backing of CCU President David DeCenzo, a new service called CHANT411 will begin this summer. A one-stop shop for service and information, the new office will provide one-on-one service, with the students needs being met as its main focus.

"Service excellence is what we're striving for. Anything we can do to find a solution or answer questions, that's what we'll do," said Sager.

Programs such as CHANT411 are meant to combat the university's retention rates. Nationally, poor customer service is the second reason for students abandoning their first school of choice, according to Sager.

"We want to eliminate frustrations and exceed expectations," she said.

Focus groups attended by 43 students last month provided a frame for Sager and her team to begin working with. During the meetings, Sager noticed a common theme.

"I feel students should be apart of the creative process," she said, "without the students, there is no university. During the focus groups, we saw there were a lot of services one student knew about that other students didn't, and some services none of them knew about at all."

Take the pickup service offered at Hicks Dining Hall. Sick and can't make it to lunch or dinner? If you have a meal plan, you can fill out a form and have a friend pick it up.

"Is little things like that we also want to promote. We're about helping the student navigate the University, because there is so much offered here," she said.

The new office will have all the social media bases covered. A website and Facebook page are being created and expect pictures via their Instagram. For now, students with suggestions or questions can submit them via Twitter to @CHANT_411.

"Do we expect students to walk over to our office in Sands Hall? No. We're not advertising a place to come; we want to come to you."

Students willing to share contact information will receive follow up calls, making sure their needs were met.

"If we can get a phone number or email address, we definitely want to follow up," Sager said.

CHANT411 will eventually occupy a space inside the LÉl Jackson Student Center after the building's expansion. There, Sager and crew will be able to provide even more services.

Until then, they will operate out of Sands Hall, (where the Post Office is located), room 128.

The office will do a dry run this summer with ten students managing the social media sites and answering phones. A full roll out is set for Fall 2013.

"Many times, students don't realize a service is available until they need it. That's why our motto is 'Here When You Need Us'," Sager said.

Samantha Ehinger, a Coastal Carolina University graduate with a degree in Marine Biology, was recently on the popular television game show Wheel of Fortune.

Ehinger played competitive rounds and was the youngest player on the panel. Although she walked away in third place, she didn’t walk away empty handed and this was her favorite part of the whole experience.

“I’ve always been good with words so being able to prove to myself that I can do it under that kind of stress was awesome,” said Ehinger.

Her biggest regret of the show was picking the “L” and losing the car. She has wanted a car since high school and according to Ehinger as soon as she gets her winnings she is going to buy that car.

Waiting for the show to air has been a huge part of her journey on Wheel of Fortune considering she was not allowed to share any of the details with her friends, family or boyfriend.

Ehinger’s Boyfriend, Sean McCarthy said he watched the show with just as much anticipation as anyone else.

Ehinger explained that she had to keep her “lips sealed” even when everyone begged her to tell. She explained being on the show as “pretty surreal” and seeing herself as others see her is “nerve racking”.

“Being able to fly to LA for a week and being on the show was incredible,” said Ehinger.

“Everyone on the show was super nice and supportive. They kept telling me to take a deep breathe and enjoy because the time flies by, and it did!”

Ehinger remains a fan of the game show and thoroughly enjoyed her time on it. Now that the secret is out, Ehinger won a total of $3,000.

Coastal Carolina’s CINO week, which started on April 20, and ended the following Friday gave students the opportunity to get involved on campus and have a little fun at the same time.

The week started off with The Great Day of Service, and events like Flow Yoga and the Farmers market carried us through the week. There were some interesting activities like UP’s Got Talent, which was held in University Place’s Grand Strand Activity House and the Magic show put on by magician Mat Franco. He showed some of his best tricks and then gave a little lesson on how to do some of the more common magic tricks.

But the grand finale, and the one event everyone looks forward to all year, CINO Day took over campus on Friday and gave students a little fun time before exams kick in to full gear.

There were several activities laid out on Prince Lawn that students could participate in: Zip lining, the Ferris wheel, a spinner, a water slide, or if you’re not into the ride thing you could have gotten acquainted with some exotic pets and taken pictures in the huge blow up chair.

Not into that either? You could have made a tie-dye shirt, a wax hand, or a stuffed bear, and who doesn’t like free stuff? There was something for everybody at this year’s CINO Day.

The line for the tickets and CINO day shirts was pretty long, but the liability form line moved pretty quickly. Students were excited about holding the Boa Constrictor, baby alligator, and the parrot.

Tasha Montgomery, a freshman, said she loved the free food, but wasn’t much in to the animals.

“Definitely the free food,” she said. “Lines could have been shorter though. My least favorite part would have to be the animals; I don’t like regular animals so I stayed away from the exotic ones they brought.” Rachael Johnson said she liked everything about CINO Day, the first one she has attended at Coastal Carolina.

“I really liked the big chair and stuffed bears, the animals were pretty cool too,” she said. “There wasn’t anything I didn’t like about it. I can’t really complain about free stuff, you know.”

Senior, Dezjhion Wilkins, said this year’s CINO day was better than the ones from his freshman, sophomore, and junior years put together. He was glad that the last CINO day he would be able to attend turned out to be the best one of all his Coastal years.

If you weren’t able to make it to this year’s CINO day, there is always next year, but who’s to say it will top this one? CAB, OSAL, University Housing, and everyone else who took part in making this year’s CINO week happen really did make this the best CINO Day on Earth.

If you have noticed the water fountains that have filtered water, or seen the recycle/paper/plastic/trash stations all around campus, you have witnessed the University going green, and Coastal Carolina has yet another title to add under their belt.

Coastal Carolina made it on "The Princeton Review's Guide to 322 Green Colleges," which profiles the top green schools in the country based on the schools' course offerings, campus infrastructure, activities and career preparation to measure their commitment to the environment and sustainability.

CCU received a green rating of 88 for Campus Life and Facilities, which tied the College of Charleston's score and beat Clemson's score of 85.

Every year, since the list has been started, Coastal has been recognized as one of the most eco-friendly schools in the country. The only other schools in South Carolina that have been recognized are Clemson University, College of Charleston, Furman University, University of South Carolina, and Winthrop University.

"We scored strongest in green buildings through LEED (Leadership in Energy and Environment Design) Certification, having alternate transportation available such as the Coastal Cycles bike program and the shuttles, and offering environmental studies classes and sustainability-focused research," said Jennifer Sellers, Sustainability Coordinator.

With more of these opportunities around campus, it makes it more convenient for students to recycle while basically giving them no other choice.

"I think it's important for universities to take steps to be more environmentally friendly because universities help set an example for other students and hopefully create an environmentally friendly culture that those students can take with them when the graduate," said Sellers.

According to Coastal Carolina's Master Plan, the set of goals CCU prepared for it's expansion over the next few years, the University will be transformed into a walking/biking campus.

"Students, staff and faculty can also contribute to these steps by recycling, using a water refill station or simply walking to campus instead of driving. It is important to simply live green every day so we can have a smaller carbon footprint for future generations," said Sellers.

CCU students are already contributing to the environment through the convenient stations around campus.

"The water bottle filters attached to the water fountains are very convenient for students who want better tasting water on the go," said Zach Cafiero, freshman physics major.

Members of the Sustainability club, called "eco-reps," carry buttons around campus that say "caught green handed." These buttons are distributed to anyone around campus who proves they are helping make our university a little bit greener.

"We have almost completed the University's Sustainability Plan, a publication for the President's Climate Commitment, which outlines future plans to help reduce our carbon footprint through green building, transportation, waste reduction, curriculum and more," said Sellers.

Sellers said it is important to consider the environment before printing unnecessary documents, and always use the recycling stations and water filters around campus to help with the process.

The Carolina Recycling Association also honored coastal Carolina with the Outstanding College or University Program Award during its annual conference and trade show on April 10 in Myrtle Beach.

This award is given to the South Carolina college or university that does the best job of promoting sustainable resources through waste reduction, reuse, and recycling on its campus.

AlcoholEdu for College is an online alcohol education program available to the entire Coastal Carolina University community. The confidential and personalized program comes in two parts. Because CCU cares about students' health, safety, and academic success, the University expects every incoming first-year / freshman and transfer student to complete AlcoholEdu for College.

Coastal Carolina University has joined other top schools in the country in offering AlcoholEdu for College. Whether you are an abstainer or drinker, the program, designed to empower students, helps you to make well-informed decisions about alcohol, respond to the drinking behavior of peers, and achieve your academic goals.

AlcoholEdu is not a lecture about alcohol. Rather, it is a program for college students who are thoughtful about life choices or who have a shared commitment to the health and welfare of others.

If you have any questions about AlcoholEdu or other programming that we offer, please feel free to contact Counseling Services at 843-349-2305, or visit our website: www.coastal.edu/counseling.
For the past five weeks, Catherine Scott, assistant professor of elementary math and science education, and her students have been laying traps along Prince Bridge, hoping to catch a few of the unofficial mascots of Coastal Carolina University.

They are conducting a mark and recapture study of the Coastal Turtles. Yes, they have a name and even a Twitter account, @CoastalTurtles. Some students, however, have seen the traps and are lead to believe the turtles are being harmed. This is not true.

"I'm so happy to see that the students care, but no turtles are being harmed during the course of this study," said Scott.

Two types of known turtles occupy Prince pond: the native yellow-bellied slider and the non-native red ear slider. Scott and her team set traps overnight and check them within 24-hours for turtles. Sardines are used to lure the reptiles into the cages.

"The sardines are a treat for the turtles," she said.

Once the turtles are captured, their species is determined, followed by measurements of weight, height and shell size. Filings along the scute (the outer rim of a turtle's shell) determine the name, and they're set back free into Prince pond.

"The process is no harm to the turtles," said Scott.

The study serves two purposes. For students of professor Scott, this is an example of the practical training encouraged by CCU's Quality Enhancement Plan (QEP).

"It's beneficial to our middle and elementary majors to learn how to gather and collect data that can translate to future class lessons," she said.

The second purpose the study serves is ecological; reptiles are "good environmental barometers."

"We're also looking into the effect a non-native species like the red ear slider will have on the pond's ecosystem," said Scott. "If we see changes in the turtles, we know there may be an issue with their environment."

Seeing something that appears inhumane and doing something about it is a noble characteristic in anyone. The attempt to free the Coastal Turtles exemplifies this. But Scott urges some caution in this case.

"Be careful to think about the bigger picture," she said. "This is a way to make sure the turtles will be there 10 years from now."

Can the champs repeat in 2013?
Coach Moglia and the Big South Champion Chanticleers look to repeat in 2013

The Coastal Carolina football squad saw tremendous success in Coach Joe Moglia’s first year as the Head Coach last season.

After a disappointing 2011 football season for the Chanticleers, it was decided that a change needed to be made at the Head Coach position. On December 19, 2011, it was announced that Moglia would be the new Head Football Coach for the Chanticleers heading into the 2012 season.

The Moglia era started off on a high note as the Chants began the 2012 football season with back to back wins, including a thrilling 47-45 triple overtime road win over Furman University back in September.

However after their strong start, the Chant’s success was briefly halted by a string of four consecutive losses. At this point, everyone probably considered the Chants season over.

Just when everything seemed to be going downhill, Moglia’s team put together a winning streak that lasted until the end of the 2012 regular season. The Chants won all five of their conference games and finished the 2012 regular season 8-5 overall and were crowned Big South Champions.

In the first round of the 2012 NCAA Division I Playoffs, the Chants traveled down to Daytona, Florida to take on Bethune Cookman. Moglia’s Chants dominated all game long and returned to Conway, SC with a 24-14 win.

The Chants season eventually came to an end in the second round of the playoffs against #4 seed Old Dominion University in a hard fought battle. While the season ended with a loss, the success our team had last season gives Coastal fans reason to believe that things will only get better from here and we should have very high expectations for the Chants in 2013.

The Chants begin their season August 31 on the road against South Carolina State University. The Chants will take on Furman University from the Southern Conference in their Home Opener. The Game is scheduled for September 7 at a time to be announced. The Chants end their season with a road game in Columbia, South Carolina, where they will face the University of South Carolina from the SEC.

Coastal Carolina hires new Women’s Basketball coach

On Friday April 12th, Jaida Williams was named the sixth head women’s basketball coach in Coastal Carolina History.

Before being announced as head coach, Williams served at Wake Forest where she spent the 2012-2013 season as the Demon Deacons assistant coach and recruiting coordinator while she built a top-20 recruiting class.

Williams also served as the team’s offensive coordinator, helping the Deacons average 67.6 points per game.

Not only is Williams an outstanding coach, but she was also an outstanding player.

She was a standout player for Cal Poly Pomona from 2002-05, bringing the Broncos to a 23-7 record her senior year, and a spot in the NCAA Division II tournament.

Before playing for Pomona she played at Barry University, where she helped the Buccaneers to a 21-9 record as a freshman, earning a spot in the Sunshine State Conference all-freshman honors team.

As a sophomore she lead the team in scoring and rebounding giving her a ticket on the All-SSC first team and as a Kodak All-American honorable mention.

Director of Athletics, Hunter Yurachek, said he is excited to bring Williams to the Lady Chants team and is confident she will fit in with the team’s goals.

“I’m looking forward to her settling in, making an impact in the community and building a program on par with our vision... Champions for life,” he said.

Along with the athletic director, many other coaches are singing praises for Coach Williams.

Randolph Childress, assistant men’s basketball coach for Wake Forest, said Coastal Carolina made a solid coaching move with Williams.

“Coastal Carolina has made a great choice in hiring Jaida Williams. She will bring a great amount of passion, energy, enthusiasm, and knowledge to the Coastal Carolina program.”

In a press conference, Jaida said she is very excited to be here at Coastal. She mentioned that Coastal is a school on the rise, and she is honored and blessed to be chosen to be apart of the Coastal team.

Williams also said she loves the beach, so Coastal must be a perfect match.

• A couple kiwis
• Some raspberries
• Box of blueberries
• Box of strawberries

Are you looking for a cute and easy graduation present that will double as a center piece and feed your hungry guests? Look no further!

First, find a vase or jar that will fit a head of lettuce. Now wash all of your fruit. Take the shish kabobs and stick them through the fruit. Be gentle with the raspberries, they tend to fall off.

Depending on the desired size, fill about 10 shish kabobs with fruit. Now, get a pot about 1/4 or less full of water and throw in a dash of salt. Now you want it to get boiling. Then get a glass bowl and set it on top of the boiling pot. Pour about 1/8th of the milk chocolate in there and you will watch it slowly melt. Because the heat will become hotter when a bowl is on top of the pot, be careful that the chocolate doesn’t burn. When it becomes rich and creamy, dip a spoon into the chocolate and drizzle on your fruit.

If you want to decorate with white chocolate repeat the same process, but add a little cream. Dip a fork in the white chocolate and drizzle on the milk chocolate.

Now, set your shish kabobs on to wax paper and set them in the fridge. When you are ready for your party, stick the shish kabobs into your vase filled with lettuce.
Archarios releases 2013 edition

Coastal Carolina's literary art magazine, Archarios, released its 2013 edition last week at CINO Day to eager students waiting to see if they, or their friends, were chosen to be in this year's copy.

"I appreciate the fact that the judging staff included my poem in Archarios," said senior John Lesnick. "I'm flattered Archarios thought the poem good enough to include."

Each year students are asked to submit pieces of art during the judging period for Archarios, before a select few are chosen to be published in the annual magazine.

Lesnick wrote a dark piece, titled "The Whiteness of the Wail," which he described as a poem about "misanthropy and self hate," as his contribution to Archarios.

"The poem is ten lines, one sentence more or less, with alliteration. The intended title of the poem was "The Whiteness of the Wail," a play on Melville's chapter in Moby Dick 'The Whiteness of the Whale,'" he said. "It is an atheistic representation of annihilation and spiteful persistence."

Each year the style and the layout of the magazine changes, depending on the people in charge, and this year the staff decided to go with a very clean look with hard lines and minimal clutter.

"I wanted to focus on the art work and keep the book simple and clean," said Savannah Todd, art director of Archarios. "Every issue of archarios will always be different. This year we decided to go smaller and use uncoated stock which has not been used in the past 3 or 4 years."

Todd said she was very happy with the way the magazine turned out this year and hopes that future editions of the magazine will build on the successes they had this year.

"I was happy with trying a different size, making it more personal," she said. "I see archarios getting bigger and trying new things. We should never limit ourselves."

Copies of Archarios were released Friday at the release party on CINO Day, and can now be found in the various buildings across campus.

"Trainspotting"

Have a thing for Scottish accents and heroin? Bad boys who care about nothing more than where their next hit will come from? Then Trainspotting, produced by Danny Boyle, will be one of your favorite movies.

Based on Irvine Welsh's book of the same name, this film released in 1996 contains elements of comedy, a little romance, but is weighed down with the gore and tragedy of a heroin addict's life.

Snoop Lion presents: Reincarnated

At first when I heard the legendary Snoop Dogg was going to change his name and become a reggae artist, I (like many other people) thought it was a joke.

Although most work by the man himself is sure to either be vastly overrated or deservedly overlooked, Snoop Lion shows that his renowned ability to improve the overall quality of his work through his choice of collaborators has not been diminished.

Despite the marked efforts of his collaborators to bring this companion album to his new film Reincarnated to a passable level, Snoop should definitely reapply his infamous pipes to rap music and avoid ever making another reggae album.

Snoop's knowledge of reggae seems to be about as deep as my own, which is to say it is shallower than a kiddie pool. The album demonstrates clunky, negatively stereotypical concepts, and hollow cookie-cutter reggae lyrics (for example: "Take care of Mother Earth cause ah she be the planet").

Even the strong production work (done primarily by Diplo, Jillionaire, and Marshy Fire, all of Major Lazer fame) can't resurrect the weak concept of this album.

The only recognizably redeemable part of this album comes at the very end. If you can wade through the rest of this mediocre work, you will come to the album closer, "Ashtrays and Heartbreaks."

This song talks about loss and keeping your life together after the thrill is gone with surprising depth. It features a shockingly powerful chorus by the last person anyone would expect to appear in a reggae album- Miley Cyrus.

Ultimately, this album is a misappropriation of Rastafarian culture, and is not worth your time.

Conditions that have a direct effect on your material well-being are likely to show a marked improvement in the year ahead. Luck will be on your side.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
-- You must be extremely careful not to show partiality to certain friends. If you do, you’ll lose the respect of many.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
-- Don’t take on too many tasks you can comfortably manage. Your overall performance will greatly suffer if you’re overburdened.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
-- Though there will be situations in which you’ll need to take some risks, there will also be times when you’ll need to be conservative. Know the difference.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
-- A close friend might get hurt if you fail to return the warmth and consideration that this person has consistently shown you in the past. Be mindful of your behavior.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
-- Self-doubt is likely to be your worst enemy, so you need to figure out how to deal with it. If you don’t, you’ll lose all the momentum you’ve gained.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)
-- Be careful, because your financial trends will be mixed. Though you may gain in some instances, you could suffer an unexpected loss.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)
-- Although you have excellent leadership qualities, you may not be using them enough. Step up to the plate when called to do so.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)
-- Because you’ll tend to hear and see only what you want to, you could be cruising for a bruising. Be an attentive and conscientious listener.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
-- Treat all your friends in your usual considerate manner, but don’t let anyone walk all over you. A person who’s taken advantage of you in the past may try to do so again.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19)
-- In order to achieve an important objective, you must stay focused on your target at all times. If you deviate, even briefly, you’re likely to be thrown off course.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20)
-- Although your judgment is likely at its soundest, unfortunately, you might allow lesser heads to rule the day. Don’t doubt your instincts.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
-- By working in fits and starts, you severely minimize your effectiveness and productivity. That doesn’t mean that you won’t do anything well, it just means that you won’t do enough.

Summer Best Bets

Many Coastal students plan to stick around the area for the summer and are going to want to have some fun in the sun while they’re in proximity to the beach. This summer there will be a variety of events planned all along the Grand Strand to keep students active on their down time.

The 3rd Annual Dirty Myrtle Mud Run will be held on Saturday, May 25 beginning at 9am in the Waterbridge residential community in Carolina Forest. Myrtle Beach’s only mud run includes individuals or teams of four (male, female, coed) and they run a three mile course with over twenty obstacles and mud pits. Registration will be available through the morning of the race at Waterbridge from 7:30 am to 10:30 am. Prices increase the closer race day approaches so sign up early. For more information about the mud run, log on to www.dirtymyrtlemudrun.com.

The Boathouse will be hosting their annual Free Summer Concert Series all summer long. Some of the scheduled performers this year will include Parmalee on May 26, Saliva on June 9, Bubba Sparxx on June 30, and many more of your favorites. For a complete list of the performers apart of the free concert series, contact the Boathouse at 843-903-2628 or log on to www.boathouseemb.com.

The Strolling Boardwalk Parade will be held every Wednesday from June 1 to August 31 at 7 pm at Barefoot Landing. The parade will include a live marching band, mascots and live animals strolling along the streets of the complex.

Every night, from 8:30 pm to 11 pm, all summer long, The Pier at Garden City Beach will feature live music and karaoke for entertainment. Visitors can also grab breakfast, lunch and dinner at the pier cafe all while enjoying the ocean breezes of the pier and checking out the daily catches of the fisherman.
