Wearing the 100th game is a wonderful milestone," said Moglia. "Every coach and every player that has been apart of the Coastal football program should be proud."

Coastal Carolina played Alabama A&M for the homecoming game on October 3, 2015. It was Coastal Carolina’s fifth game in the Big South Conference this year.

With a hurricane watch, time change, and the rain clouds hovering over the field, The Chanticleers pulled out a tremendous win as they won 55-0. The Chanticleers proved that no matter the weather or the complications, the game was to continue and the fans would not be disappointed.

Attendance was lower than usual with 1009 students and fans filling the stadium. Kick off time was at 2pm and the game ended at 4pm.

In the first quarter, the Chanticleers made it clear that they had a set game plan to win today’s game by scoring six points in the first three minutes of the quarter. The touchdowns were made by DeAngelo Henderson who continued to make two.

On campus and at University Place, students and employees have been parking in no park zones. Coastal Carolina student Dam Lepley said when this happens, it makes it really difficult for her to get into her building at 79.

"It’s inconsiderate for people to park in no park zones, even if just for a minute," said Lepley. "It’s also illegal. I honestly feel like students don’t really take it seriously though, because even Aramark vans park in no park zones on occasion. So, they may feel they don’t have to take it seriously.

Lepley said she does not see it happen everyday, but it is happening at a few times a week.

"I have to either maneuver around care that is in no park zones or I have to find another ramp to get up onto the sidewalks," said Lepley.

"This is kind of dangerous in a way because it requires me to stay in the road and it can be difficult for parked cars to see me because my

Hurricane Joaquin hits Coastal Carolina

Tradition Hall or the pounding of Joaquin has established himself for the state of South Carolina as the east coast. The announcement of the presence known here on campus by the President means that state ponds forming on the sidewalks rain on the rooftops of buildings. Hurricanes, the history city of Charleston, less than two miles south of Charleston, has closed several streets in their downtown area and has piled up sandbags in efforts to keep floodwaters out of their ballroom.

The rain certainly did not dampen the spirits here at Coastal Carolina during homestretch week. Over three people braved the downpour of rain and made their way Brooks Hall on Sunday to watch their Chanticleers throttle Alabama A&M by score of 69-40. You may dampen our campus Joaquin, but you will not dampen the passion of Coastal Carolina.

A healthy breakfast gets you better grades

Pallavi Crase

Eating a healthy breakfast allows students to maintain overall success in their academic lives. Classes are getting harder and students are picking up. However, it is very important for students to be healthy and body weight to eat what could be considered the most important meal of the day. Unfortunately, most college students do not have time in their busy schedule to worry about eating a healthy breakfast. Registered Dietician Kelly Magowan said most college students are looking for something fast and on the go to eat for breakfast.

Magowan said many students do not have time in the morning to eat because they have trained their bodies to skip breakfast. If they forgot to start to incorporate breakfast in the morning, they will swallow the habit and notice they wake up hungry.

For most college students, their idea of breakfast is a cup of coffee from Starbucks, maybe a pop tart all night, late nights at the library, and eating junk food. Magowan said most students choose to sleep in as late as possible to get to class, having enough time to eat what could be considered a healthy breakfast, said Magowan.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, eating a healthy breakfast can improve concentration and last exams for students. Breakfast promotes success in the classroom. A well-planned breakfast offers important nutritional foundation for a productive and healthy day. When students eat breakfast early in the day, they tend to eat a healthier overall diet, one that is more nutritious and lower in fat. A study conducted in 2005 on eating habits and academic performance reported in the "Journal of the American Dietetic Association" found that breakfast prepared students to work toward good grades. The study showed that eating breakfast on a regular basis helps improve students' memory and problem-solving skills by affecting the brain's short term blood sugar levels and long term nutritional support.

"A healthy breakfast contributes to help your body perform it helps your mind perform as well," said Magowan. "It's called breakfast because you are breaking your fast from the night, you are breaking from the fast from the previous night, to get back to eating something before going to class," said Magowan. "I can definitely tell a difference in my performances after eating breakfast.

The Food Research and Action Center states when students eat a complete breakfast instead of a partial breakfast they are quickly with fewer math and number problems. A healthy breakfast contributes to students having better performance on vocabulary and visual skills tests.

Dean of Library Services Barbara Calabrese are this year's Coastal Carolina Design Clash champions. Alex Barley, Caroline Carini, Calabrese are this year's Coastal Carolina Design Clash champions. Cotton. "Next year East Carolina has to be hanging the plaque in their respective graphic design labs, much like the winning team is a plaque engraved with their student's names.

"The competition is going to be a reoccurring competition which will continue among participating schools," said Cotton. "Winning team is a plaque engraved with their student's names.

Each team is comprised of one senior, two juniors, and one sophomore. The prize given to the winning team is a plaque engraved with the students' names.

"It's the winning school which is in the race in their respective graphic design labs, much like the winning team is a plaque engraved with their student's names," said Cotton.

Cotton explained how he has been involved in many events among students, showing from the value of teams and communication in looking forward to competition. On the night of the event each team will receive a prize, which includes a breakfast, advertising, and packaging," said Cotton. "The team knows what the specific problem is until day two of the event.

On day two the teams will have six hours to come up with a solution to their problem. By the end of the day, one team will be chosen to present their product to judges who are in other professional industries. This will be presented the next morning.

"It's a wrap," said winning team leader Alex Barley explains how they were able to solve the problem. "I enjoyed the role of being the leader for the reason that the obstacle that we came across were just right in the happy place of the real world and you're not able to really take as much time in these decisions when you have that much on your plate," said Barley. "The quick decision making combined with making sure my team was happy and as a cohesive unit even though we were doing different parts in definitely something you're not used to doing in a design firm." Barley said that this will be a nice addition to his growing portfolio. Professor Cotton hopes that the competition will encourage more art programs to get into the idea of creating other types of design competitions.

"It's a very good way to start," said Michels. "It's a great workout," said Michels. For those who do not know, quidditch is a cross between rugby and ultimate frisbee. Mellee Hille is the president of the Coastal Carolina quidditch team.

"If you're a full contact sport, and doing quidditch, you have to get worn out," said Hille.

Hille said the club sport director Taylor Beth Poth has been assisting the team.

"He has been very welcoming," said Hille. "He has done so much for us already.

At Coastal Carolina, club sports get to choose practice location first and get funding.

"It's a great way to start," said Michels. "It's a great workout," said Michels. Michels said the quidditch team are athletes and that everybody in the community is welcoming.

"Everybody on every quidditch team is so welcoming," said Hille. Ashley Michels also decided to join the Coastal Carolina quidditch team during her freshman year.

"After the first practice I was hooked," said Michels. "We're always having a good time together while working hard to stay successful," said Michels. "We include rookies from rugby and soccer, including those who are members of dodge ball," said Michels. "In any sports we are put together to create quidditch, as well as adding parts of the Harry Potter books. It's an amazing blend of a sport that is commonly existing."
New future for women's lacrosse

Karen Thomas

On August 8, 2015, Kristin Selvage was introduced as the new head coach of the women's lacrosse team at Coastal Carolina University. Selvage was born in Reading, Pa. and was raised in Boyertown, PA. Lacrosse was very popular in her area growing up.

She played lacrosse at Lock Haven University. She has a big passion for the sport. She wanted to continue on after college and become a coach. "Lacrosse is fun, there is a ton of fun, and it is exciting very quickly," said Selvage.

Selvage started her coaching career at a few Division III schools in New York State. She then made her way back to Lock Haven University, where she coached for the last 14 years. With this season, it will be her 18th year of coaching. "Challenging others to exceed their own expectations and demand excellence from themselves is rewarding," said Selvage. "Also, just being around the sport that I love is very exciting."

Selvage led the program at Lock Haven to three NCAA Division II championship appearances since 2001. This year, she became the 2015 Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Coaches Association Division II coach of the year. During that season, Lock Haven went 24-5 overall and 12-0 in the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference.

The Coastal Carolina women's lacrosse team is a newly developed program that began in February 2015. This past season, the team went 10-4 overall and reached the semifinals of the conference's tournament championship.

This year, Selvage wants to continue to build the program that they had. "The team is on the verge of great success," said Selvage. "We are ready to get them the rest of the way."

This year the lacrosse team will be playing on the new turf field. To prepare for the upcoming season, the team is doing a lot of conditioning and team peer-mentoring. They have traveled to Richmond for a tournament and will be traveling to some more tournaments in the next few weeks. Selvage will bring some changes to the season and develop a faster running offense with a tighter defensive unit.

"We want our fans to be loud and proud and tell everyone they are about our games," said Selvage. "We just want everyone to pack the stadium for every home game."

The team opens the season in mid-February with a home game against Elon on the 11th.

Moglia stats that the defense was improving, and there were not as many breakdowns on the field, but the team still needed to be a better at tackling. The second and third unit held the ground after the first unit and continued to complete plays to later gain more points on the scoreboard. The special teams were held when it came to defense as well. Today's game was not only another victory in the conference, but it was Coastal Carolina's seventh win in the program with a record of 10-5 and 5-0 in the conference.

It was clear that winning the north game and it being the homecoming game was just another win in all aspects.

The next game will be held at Coastal Carolina as the Chanticleers play against Presbyterian College on October 18, 2015.

Mac Miller is back with a vengeance. "Black or White," a medium album released in 2015, continues to add some much-needed diversity to a generation where all rap sounds are divided between New York or the West Coast. Miller's first studio album, "Wings," and his third album, "GO:OD AM," offers fans a chance to see an in-depth story of two sides of his mind of all of the stress and negativity, and has drastically opened up about his previous trials and tribulations. The self-proclaimed "King of the undergrad," which is stylized to resemble a car accident. Eloise's mother died while giving birth to her. Her father is unreliable and not present in her life. The biggest conflict of the film is when the custodial battle at the end, rooting for one side or the other, only wanting what is best for Eloise. RATING

Mac Miller is back with a vengeance. His album, "GO:OD AM," which is stylized to resemble a car accident, has more of a wistfulness, child sound to it. In this album, Miller returns to his roots that were ditched for his hip-hop and trap music. "Perfect Circle / God Spaced" takes the listeners through his new times, and after the clever interlude brings us to what became Miller learned from escaping his previous mindset. With "GO:OD AM," Mac Miller does more than just put out another hit album, he breaks free from his journey filled with sorrow and despair, and brings the listeners along for the ride. "GO:OD AM" is Miller's symbol of hope, and can be the listener's hero too.
