Coastal unites to Take Back the Night

The Coastal Carolina University community gathered in the Lillie Jackson Student Union courtyard to kickoff participation in the annual Take Back the Night march.

Take Back the Night is a global event that was adopted by Coastal Carolina. The event serves to raise awareness about sexual assault, sexual violence, rape, and many other forms of assault.

Associate Director of Counseling Services, Chris Donevant-Haines, spoke on why she feels so many students participate in the event. “I think because a lot of students understand the importance for standing up for their rights and standing up for each other,” said Donevant-Haines. “Having a safe community from joining together, creates a louder voice.”

Glow in the dark sticks, necklaces, and candles of various colors lined the tables, along with flashlights and poster board signs of many colors and sizes. These poster boards read phrases like “shine your light, take back the night” and “let your words be heard, rape is a crime.”

Handouts and pamphlets were available to educate anyone on an array of topics such as safety from domestic violence, top ten ways to deal with anger, and healthy relationships.

Director and counseling psychologist Jennie Cassidy opened up the night with a couple of statistics based on the yearly National College Health Assessment given out to random classes at the university. “What we have found from last year’s survey is that three percent of our students say that in the last

At the beginning of the spring 2016 semester, Coastal Carolina University will offer its first studio based video class.

It will be a 400 level class covering topics surrounding the moving image, its relation to the still image, and creating visuals using found footage.

Every semester new courses are offered at Coastal Carolina University in hopes of better educating students and offering new opportunities.

The course is an intro to the moving image. Students use found footage and work to explore time. It will be a project driven course requiring students to develop films in Adobe premiere CC (creative cloud) and observing the transition between the still and moving image.

The final goal is to have three to four short films as a result for every student, alternating between Krysten Paige Elliott recently wrote an article for The Odyssey called “27 Signs You Go To Coastal Carolina” highlighting 27 different scenarios that any Coastal student would understand.

Within the article there were 27 short sentences, followed by a meme that only Coastal students would understand.

The first sign is “you have to explain, in full detail, way too many times, what a Chanticleer is.” Every sign is a fun little joke that is a big inside joke with students on campus. Elliott got opinions from numerous people when writing the article. She got feedback from her friends and roommates. She said she found it really helpful to go on Yik Yak and scroll through the “hot” posts.

“Because it was the breakthrough article being published, and it was introducing CCU’s branch of The Odyssey, I wanted it to be a really relatable article,” Elliott said. “I wanted it to catch student’s eyes when they saw it online. After brainstorming for a few minutes I decided that it’d be cool to really get at the heart of our campus and bring to light some of the quirks we talk about and the inside jokes our student body has that outsiders wouldn’t fully understand.”

Elliott is from Green Sea, South Carolina and recently transferred to Coastal. She is currently a junior

ASSISTANT EDITOR

On September ninth, the fighting Chanticleer statue was revealed in front of the TD Sports Complex. The masterful and artist behind the seven foot tall sculpture was Assistant Professor of Art, Logan Woodle.

Woodle grew up on a farm in Conway just down the road from Coastal Carolina. There were always a lot of broken things around him, growing up and he always had an interest in watching people heal them. After he grew up he realized the broken things back together.

“I happened to take a high school art class where we were left a torch and had to experiment and play,” said Woodle.”That’s when I fell in love with metal smiting,” said Woodle.

From there he took his love for smelting to college where he was an undergrad at West Virginia University and continued his education at grad school in Pennsylvania. He came to Coastal as a teaching assistant for the first two years and became a full-time faculty member last year.

Woodle started out the project with a small clay model of Chauncey. Aiming about 10-15 hours a week on Chauncey, it took him about a year and a half to complete. He had some help from the sculptor professor Alexandria Kucn and his class of students.

“Woodle had enough to have a class of students that helped me clean up craftsmanship, and Alex was here the whole time,” said Woodle. “So it wasn’t too hard.”

There were some challenges Logan had to face when in the process of the project. The real challenge and the real exciting part was interfacing between myself and the person who was building the statue and the university and what the university wanted,” said Woodle. “An artist should be on artist and design it, but you also want to keep the school in mind. It was a challenge, but it was also the most fun I had working with the administration, and developing something we are all proud of.

This has been a very long process and Woodle put a lot of effort into making the statue as perfect as it can be. When it went up in front of the TD Complex, he felt very relieved.

“it is exciting to have my work out so people can see what I’ve done,” said Woodle. “But most importantly it is exciting to see it as an icon to the school can do.”

The statue symbolizes more than Bronze. It’s not another statue to make the school look pretty. What it symbolizes may be different from person to person, but to Woodle it symbolizes the pride within this school.

“the statue symbolizes the relationship that this university has with the students,” said Woodle. “We course it also symbolizes our sports programs and our power and what we are striving for. It just leaves room to make a fancy campus. I am here to make students education and lives better.

I am also proud to have been able to help build with aleks and a program that hopefully will make a mark on this campus.”

On September 30th, the fighting Chanticleer statue was revealed at the front of the TD Sports complex. The march went throughout the campus passing Smith Science Building, The Woods, Hicks Dinner Hall, going through the HTC Center, and ending in the Wall College of Business circle where the Coastal Insrumental Ambassadors performed their pre-game tradition. Marchers held lights in the dark for the fallen.

Following the march a speak-out was held for anyone that wanted to participate.

There is a place where you can share and discuss anything Coastal Carolina. Where fellow Chanticleers discuss everything tail nation. Coastal Unite! was created in story by Jeff Salermo. Salermo ran the website, coastalonfire.com, for the first six years. They now have a Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, YouTube, and Periscope. Their Twitter page currently has over 2,000 followers.

In 2009, Randy Akers became the current owner and admin of the site. Akers attended the university from 2003-2007. He graduated with a bachelor’s in music. In the time since, he has been following the band for the last four years it existed.

Randy Akers assists with running the site.

Akers said they post content about Coastal sports for people who cannot attend or listen to the game. “I feel like we do a pretty good job of keeping people updated,” said Akers.

Akers said they do their best to post updates on all Coastal sporting events. “The more events, the more fans,” said Akers.

Akers said they try to cover football, basketball, and baseball.

“With there only being two of us to do the updates, it is hard for us to do all the games. However, at the end of the year we all probably have a little bit of pride for the fan base.”

There is also a website with a message board where people come to discuss their experiences with Coastal sports.

“We post a lot of graphics and also a website with a message board where people come to discuss their experiences with Coastal sports.”

“We still have a relatively small number of people compared to the amount of people who attend and watch the games,” said Akers.

Akers said they are starting to do more social media on the site.

“Ayers said some of these are pages on Facebook and Twitter. “I think we have almost 2,000 Facebook fans,” said Akers.

Akers said they are not making any profit off any of their social media accounts.

“Any cost associated with it comes out of pocket or through donations from members of the site,” said Akers.

They have recently created t-shirts inspired by the football team ‘Be A Man’s mantra. The shirts say ‘Be A Fan.’

“People are welcome to come and get on the message boards,” said Akers.

The video work-students will do will be done in Adobe Premiere, which is available to students via the discount subscription model. Fish acknowledges that with any new software, there is a learning curve.

Although she isioment, Fish expects a lot from her students. She is strict with deadlines, attendance, and wants to stress that this is a studio arts class so attendance and outside work is mandatory for a high grade.

The class will work with found footage. This means that students will not need a camera, and students will not be shooting original videos. “They will look at found footage and the ethics of using found footage,” said Fish.

While students will not be shooting their own original videos, it is possible that they may in the future. Depending on how the class is received. The department is looking to add more in-video based class one.

If you are interested in the class you can sign up to take it next semester. It is offered on Tuesday and Thursday from 3:00-4:00 p.m.

TomorrowWorld 2015: It was not what you heard

Katie Estabrook

Although your key to happiness was the theme for TomorrowWorld 2015, but sadly many were not unlocking much happiness in Chattahoochee Hills, Georgia.

The magical weekend was easily a time to escape from everyday troubles and enter the strange but freeing, “World of Tomorrow.” Unfortunately for many day pass holders, the TomorrowWorld experience was anything but.

Between the non stop rain, heavy accumulation of mud, and the chaos caused by shut down shuttles Saturday night, it is natural to see why many people are feeling left out in the cold by the “People of Tomorrow.”

Heavy backlash from the media after this years TomorrowWorld did not go unnoticed. There have flooded social media with very negative comments towards SFX and the event on things that were out of the company’s hands casting a shadow for people who have never attended.

Choppa’s experience with previous festivals has helped her be prepared for whatever TomorrowWorld or Mother nature was going to throw at her.

“We had the all rain we endured, the grounds become flooded and the ‘apocalypse’ had begun by Friday morning,” said Choppa. “Although some people were mad and frustrated with the weather, it was not my first rode. I have been to several festivals so I made the best out of the situation we were given and had a blast even if I was a little wet and muddy.”

With all of the negative media and opinions directed towards TomorrowWorld after this years event, many forget to experience the irreplaceable memories right in front of them. Many attendees have flooded social media with very negative comments towards SFX and the event on things that were out of the company’s hands casting a shadow for people who have never attended.

Choppa feels that TomorrowWorld did a great job at providing resources, but feels that this years troubles of reality.

“TomorrowWorld cannot control the weather, and in my opinion, did everything they could to ensure our satisfaction,” said Choppa. “People who were not out there are obviously going to make things sound worse. Although the weather was not the best and some of us struggled because tents were flooded, I think it actually made our bonds stronger,” said Choppa. “Instead of dwelling over the situation, we all embraced it. We all laughed and cried with each other while walking barefoot through the mud because our shoes were ruined.”

Big names such as David Guetta, Flux Pavilion, Kaskade, and Armin Van Buuren closed out TomorrowWorld’s main stages, one of nine very extravagant stages offering non stop music at the festival.

On Sunday, the festival shut down due to several days of non stop rain and limited entry to Dreamville campers only. This provided for a more intimate setting between the festival goers and the artists, making it feel as if the day could last forever.

The weather was not ideal, but it did not matter when lasting memories and lifelong friendships were made.

Choppa says her favorite part of going to festivals is meeting new people and making lasting friendships.

“Meeting lifelong friends at these festivals is mainly the reason I go,” said Choppa. “I can now say I have at least one friend from almost every state and outside the U.S. who remain in contact with.”

English major. Her future goal is to become a high school principal. She attended the College of Charleston before coming to Coastal and noted it “was a big difference between the schools.”

She got involved with The Odyssey just a couple of months ago because of her friend and co-worker, Caity Pundak. They are both staff members for the student produced feature magazine, Tempo. Caity is also Editor-in-Chief for Coastal’s branch of The Odyssey.

“From there I applied online to be a writer. Anyone interested can go to The Odyssey web site and apply there. Writers are required to submit one article each week about something that interests them.”

“I’m sure that I’ll also write more articles focused on the Coastal community because it’s fun to write about a college life that we all can relate to,” said Elliot. “My favorite part about writing this article was thinking up all of the typical things Coastal students complain and laugh about. It gives you a sense of community when you do things like write this type of article, or even read it.”

Coastal Carolina is off next week, but will return to action in New Jersey against Monmouth on October 24th at 1 p.m. The Chanticleers never looked surprised all of Brooks Stadium at the beginning of the second quarter by scoring from a yard out on a fake field goal attempt. That score gave Coastal Carolina the lead. From there, the Chanticleers never looked back. The defense for Coastal Carolina came up big in the final two minutes of the game, stopping Presbyterian on the 40th and 30th, when senior linebacker Kelvin Deveaux broke up Kaleb Griffin’s pass to Devin Glenn in the end zone. With Saturday night’s victory, Coastal Carolina improves to 6-0 on the year and 1-0 in Big South Conference play. Junior wide receiver Bruce Mapp almost recorded his sixth career kickoff return for a touchdown, which would have tied the FCS record. However, a penalty forced Coastal Carolina to start on their own ten yard line.

Moglia praised the special teams effort from his side.

Kicker Ryan Granger notched a season long 47 yard field goal in the second quarter. Granger surprised all of Brooks Stadium as he kicked the record for consecutive games with a touchdown. He tied the record with 20 games when he scored from five yards out with just under ten minutes to go in the fourth quarter.

“Once again, I have to give all the credit to my offensive line,” said Henderson. “They’re the ones setting me up for big plays and touchdowns.”

Henderson is tied with David Sischo for the FCS record for consecutive games with a touchdown. Coincidentally, Henderson can break that record when Coastal Carolina travels to Minnesota in two weeks.

Joe's Crab Shack is a restaurant filled with fresh seafood and crab legs by the bucket, literally.

For all the seafood lovers out there, Joe's will fill all your needs. The restaurant serves crab legs, lobster, oysters, and fish. They serve a variety of salads, hamburgers, chicken, and sandwiches for customers who do not like seafood. A selection of desserts is an option if you are still hungry afterwards.

The crab legs that are served at Joe's are not your ordinary order of crab legs. They have a special rub of spices that go on top.

Draculina and his friends are back again with another mission in Hotel Transylvania 2. Draculina and his friends are on a new mission to try to bring out the monster in his half human half vampire grandson.

Now that Draculina, played by Adam Sandler, has opened Hotel Transylvania's doors to humans, things are changing for the better, at least that is what he thinks.

Draculina is secretly worried that his half human grandson, Dennis, is not showing his vampire side. He does not understand why he does not feel like vampire blood in his veins.

Dennis has everything planned until he discovers some unexpected frights along the way. Things really get hairy when Draculina's clumsy, conservative father, played by Mel Brooks, pays an unexpected visit.

Hotel Transylvania 2 is filled with comical antagonists that show viewers the other side of the scary monsters that ran our nightmares as children. The film will leave you with a warm and spookly fuzzy feeling when the credits start rolling. Although it was a good film, the first Hotel Transylvania was the real hit.
