Perfectly pleased with pride

Pride & Prejudice review

Joey Comras

Pride & Prejudice showcases the ties of sisterhood, a relatable and overtly dysfunctional family and the true power of a strong young woman’s words and heart.

The play is directed by the esteemed Monica Bell and stars junior musical theatre major Paige Mason who plays Elizabeth Bennet and junior acting major JP McLaurin who plays Mr. Darcy. Pride & Prejudice is a lively production that, though it is quite long, has a flowing movement about it between each scene change, every letter read aloud, dance number and costume change.

It is thankfully not a stagnant play and is quite comprehensible. It might be thought that, with all the flowery and embroidered words used in that era, it would be a tough time understanding what all is occurring, but there honestly is no such thing. Words are never lost in translation and it helps that all the dialects were held together quite strongly by each performer. Paige Mason is a brilliant Elizabeth, who gives it her all with each bold step and logical thought of her body. She is poised with a fine wit and realistic understanding of the world and figuring things out with every new chapter in her life. JP McLaurin juxtaposes the prideful and stoic Mr. Darcy, with perfect indifference that slowly crumbles to the irrepressible longing for Elizabeth. They make for quite the handsome pair.

The whole ambience of the play seems to revolve around a certain simple elegance; from the carefully colorful costumes, to the beautifully crafted set that was dynamically used throughout the show. There are vast intricate layers to this production.

Whether it is the change in scenery, from the woods and country decorum to regal estates with provincial land, the trying twists and turns of the heart or even just the characters themselves.

The characters all contrast each other greatly in the play from the prideful and snobby Mr. Darcy, highly contrasting with the realistic and bold Elizabeth Bennet, the smiling and jubilant Mr. Bingley opposite the gentle and shy Jane Bennet and the absurdly hilarious Mrs. Bennet beside the calmer and wiser Mr. Bennet.

This is a perfectly pleasant production of Pride & Prejudice, structured with wonderful characters, elegant costumes and a beautifully sound architectural set. Anything that might be thought of as boring or drab in the show definitely is not and even though it is a romance, it also shows just how important family is.

A family’s love and support is the defining factor of this show, no matter how dysfunctional they might be or what class they were from over the 80 plus from over the years. It teaches new light, “said Hudson. “It teaches you know we’re really just celebrating 25-years of winning awards and featuring student work,” said Lane. “We’ve won the Pace Maker, we’ve also won the Pinnacle Awards, and last year we just took second in the ACP awards. So we have over 80 plus from over the years.”

The student-run organization first started out as a staff publication that students could write for, according to Archarios Editor Alison Lane.

“Yo have really just celebrating 25-years of winning awards and featuring student work,” said Lane. “We’ve won the Pace Maker, we’ve also won the Pinnacle Awards, and last year we just took second in the ACP awards. So we have over 80 plus from over the years.”

Coastal Carolina women’s rugby team

Empowering women one team at a time

Briana Rivas

Rugby is known throughout the world as one of the most brutal and competitive sports ever. By the end of the game, players can be bruised, bloody and sometimes severely injured.

Rugby has always been seen as a man’s sport, however the women beg to differ.

Today, thousands of women participate in the sport. Women’s rugby battles the societal standards set for women. These women who play the sport have set out to prove that they are just as tough, if not tougher, than any man.

According to a BuzzFeed article, one Australian player, Georgia Page, played almost an entire game with a broken nose. After getting the injury early on, she continued to play, unscathed. The video footage of the game went viral, gaining her the title, Rugby War Goddess. At Coastal Carolina, a group of women have created a rugby team.

Coastal Carolina rugby player LeAnne Hudson said women’s rugby is empowering because not only does it push your limits, but it crushes the feminist views commonly associated with women’s sports.

“When you tell people you play rugby they look at you in a whole new light,” said Hudson. “It teaches confidence to those who may not have it anywhere else.”
There will not be an issue next week on April 13 from The Chanticleer staff participating in the Celebration of Inquiry.

Correction and Clarification

In The Chanticleer article, “Overcrowding causing growing pains for Coastal” in Issue 19, it stated that Dean Overton divided his office and put a wall. This is incorrect. Dean Ennis of Edwards College has divided his office with a wall.
Local leader to be new commencement speaker

Katie Estabrook
REPORTER | @katieestabrook

President and CEO of The Jackson Companies in Myrtle Beach, Dennis Wade, will be speaking at the commencement ceremonies in May.

Wade, who is a graduate of the University of South Carolina, is very involved in the local community as well as on Coastal Carolina’s campus.

Along with his CEO position, he also serves on the board of directors, the Coastal Education Foundation board of directors, the board of visitors for the Wall College of Business and the Horry County United Way Community Outreach Council. Because of his dedication to the local community, Wade received the Leadership Grand Strand’s Ann DeBock award in 2007.

In order to be eligible to receive this prestigious award, one must have graduated from the Leadership Grand Strand program and must maintain a record of service and leadership throughout the Grand Strand community.

Those who receive the award are a passing the torch to the local community and demonstrate this by volunteering in service or civic clubs, serving on appointed board or commissions and demonstrating effective leadership skills in their personal and professional lives.

Wade has also been an active member of the Waccamaw Community Foundation for years. The foundation helps to ensure that local philanthropist’s donations are effectively being used to better the surrounding community.

While they were looking forward to seeing “House of Cards” actor Michael Kelly speak, a dedicated and passionate person like Dennis Wade is someone worth emulating and should not come as a disappointment.

Although Kelly will not be at this semester’s commencement ceremony due to conflicting schedules, Provost of the university, Ralph Byington, said that he would be making an appearance at a commencement in the future.

“He had commitments, of course,” said Byington. “He’s a very famous individual. There was a commitment that we knew about and we were hopeful that he was going to be able to still make it but instead those programming needs put him some place else.”

FROM PRIDE you are dealing with all things throughout one’s life, whether it would be love and loss, or heartbreak and strife, family matters most of all.

Costume designer, Maria Nieto constructed elegant period costumes for the production. “I really wanted to bring out each of the character’s personalities in what they wore, and because it is such a complicated show, in terms of families and who is connected to who, there’s just a lot of information to absorb,” said Nieto.

Nieto said the colors of the clothes can help the audience identify who the characters are from the clothes representing each character’s personality. “They’re connected and they are complementary of each other,” said Nieto.

Nieto said she thinks it’s one of those shows where you either love the story or you hate it. “It’s definitely not for everyone, but if you enjoy a good romance, this is definitely that,” said Nieto. “It’s funny and I really enjoyed bringing out those aspects of the characters in the clothing and just kind of generally helping to create a world for them to live in because without the clothing, you could probably do it in a modern style or something like that, but without the clothing it wouldn’t be Pride & Prejudice, it would just be Jane Austen’s story as an adaptation.”

Nieto said she thinks it’s a beautiful world that they live in and she really wanted to help bring that to life.

The play is being showed at 79 Avenue Theatre. It will be playing on Wednesday, April 6, through Friday, April 8 at 7:30 p.m. On Saturday, April 9, there will be a showing at 3 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

COASTAL CAROLINA
U N I V E R S I T Y
Students, faculty and community members will have the chance to present creative inquiry and research at the bi-annual Celebration of Inquiry hosted at Coastal Carolina in April. The bi-annual symposium offers a wide array of sessions that include presentations, panels and exhibitions on different topics.

This year’s theme, Beyond Borders: Living in a Global Society, is centered around globalization.

According to the World Health Organization, globalization is the “increased interconnectedness and interdependence of peoples and countries” that necessitates changing national and international policies to allow “opening borders to increase the fast flow of goods, services, finance, people and ideas across international borders.”

Advancements in technology as well as the internet’s ability to connect individuals worldwide have aided in heightening the sense of a global economy. Because of the easy access to other cultures, it is almost impossible not to be affected by globalization in some way every day.

The main presentations, which include the panel discussion, keynote address and panel presentations are required to be centered around this theme.

“Beyond Borders is this year’s theme, and all sessions, panels, and exhibits are required to revolve around this theme,” said Dr. Yoav Wachsman, Professor of Economics and organizer of the Celebration of Inquiry.

Professor of Economics and organizer of the Celebration of Inquiry, Dr. Yoav Wachsman, expressed excitement for one presentation in particular.

“I’m very excited to have the keynote speaker who is the U.S. ambassador of Iceland, Ambassador Robert Barbee,” said Dr. Wachsman. “Not only is he a very important person, but I’ve seen some of his YouTube videos and he is also a very eloquent speaker.”

While the main presentations are required to revolve around globalization, others created by students, faculty and community members can be about any topic.

Wachsman said that students should use this time to further their learning.

“It’s a way to enrich their lives outside of the classroom,” said Wachsman. “They get to listen to faculty and other student’s research, both within their department and outside their department and there are a wide array of events, so something should interest them.”

Classes will be redirected from noon on April 12 to noon on April 14 for students to attend the sessions. Wachsman explained that attendance by students is mandatory.

“Students are required and expected to attend,” said Wachsman. “There are a wide array of events. We have sessions going on throughout the day and classes will be redirected, but this does not mean students should be on vacation during those times. It means they are expected to go to sessions and learn about something that interests them.”

The Because of Rugby campaign launched by the Emory women's rugby team shines light on the sport's enforcement of positive body image.

According to the campaign, it encourages women to be strong in a culture that tells them to be delicate. It teaches women how to improve their bodies and not suffer for the bodies that society wants them to have.

"It's intense and not at all easy to play, but it encourages us to show our strength in a world where social media dictates how we are supposed to look and behave," said Max Williams, Coastal Carolina rugby player. "You can be fat, skinny, short, athletic, etc. and still play!"

"Women in rugby show an undeniable bond with their teammates. In a photo project entitled, Rugged Grace by the Harvard Women's Rugby Team, the women wrote about what they loved about their teammates on each other's bodies.

"Rugby is so much about physically throwing your body on the line for your teammates during games and training, and that intense appreciation, love, trust and support for each other is what we wanted to reflect," said one of the women on the Harvard rugby team.

"The fact that we play 80 minutes beating down the other team, and then after go hang out and have a social with them has taught me a new level of sportsmanship," said Taylor Farrow, player on Coastal Carolina's rugby team.

Coastal Carolina's women's rugby team were unanimous in their love and admiration for the sport.

This Unruly Mess I've Made

Based on the book by Nicholas Sparks, comes yet another romantic movie that will most likely make you ugly cry. Set in Beaufort, North Carolina the ladies man, played by Travis Shaw, falls for the girl next door played by Teresa Palmer, who initially wants nothing to do with him.

Travis is a veterinarian who may come off as the big headed player, but actually has a huge heart and a flair for romance. His counterpart, Terra, is a feisty medical student who just moved into the house next door. Soon enough, they realize they are meant for each other. This may seem like a very cliché story line, however it is far from predictable.

The classic, yet tragic, Nicholas Sparks twist is what makes this movie fantastic and definitely worth seeing. Not only is it a great story, but the location is to die for. Beautiful beaches, boat rides and lots of twinkle lights will delight the part of your mind that longs for romance. This may seem like a very cliché story line, however it is far from predictable.
